Winant Quits Security Post To Answer Landon Blast

G.O.P. Member Resigns So He Can Reply as Private Citizen.

Will Defend Act On Radio Tonight

Political Tempo Quickens.

John G. Winant resigned as chairman and member of the Social Security Board in order to reply as a private citizen to Gov. Alf M. Landon's criticism of the social security act.

President Roosevelt today will begin his open campaign with an address to the New York State Democratic convention in Syracuse.

The Senate campaign expenditures committee ordered an investigation into alleged political coercion and other charges in the WPA in Pennsylvania.

A Baltimore speech by Gov. Landon on October 27 was announced by the Republican State committee.

George N. Peek, former head of the AAA and of the Export-Import Bank, announced his support of Gov. Landon for the Presidency.

Gov. Landon told train crowds in the Midwest that the Administration has hidden details of its extravagance and called for publicity on pay of all those directing relief work.

Col. Frank Knox, the Landon running mate, told the New York State G. O. P. convention that Democrats "have put themselves out" of office.

Al Smith will deliver an address in Chicago on October 22, it was announced by the National Jeffersonian Democrats, opposed to Roosevelt's re-election.

Winant Quits Post.

John G. Winant, chairman and Republican member of the Social Security Board, resigned last night, in a letter to President Roosevelt, in order that he may reply, as a private citizen, to the attack on the social security act made by Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, at Minneapolis last Saturday.

"Gov. Landon has made the problem of social security a major issue in this campaign," Winant wrote to the President, "and I cannot support him."

It had been announced previously by the Democratic National Committee that Winant would reply tonight to Gov. Landon's address.

Twice Governor of N. H.

Winant, twice Republican Governor of New Hampshire, told the President he does not feel that members of independent commissions and boards, such as the Social Security Board, "should take an active part in politics." He said that while he retained his position on the board he was not free to defend the act, and declared:

"I have never assumed that the social security act was without fault. I had assumed and even hoped that time and experience might dictate many and important changes. • • • But Gov. Landon's address at Milwaukee was not a plea for the improvement of the act; it was a plea to scrap the act."

Winant said the Republican Party's references to social security in its platform were "disappointing," and he challenged as "untrue" Gov. Landon's statements in Milwaukee that the act was "a fraud on the working man" and "a cruel hoax."

Saying he was interested in the social security program "not from a partisan viewpoint" but "as a humanitarian measure," Winant told the President that "no work I

4 Maryland Police Suspended; Took 'Fees,' Is Charge

Baltimore, Sept. 28 (AP).—Four Maryland State troopers were suspended today on charges of having accepted fees or gifts given by persons in "the expectations of receiving a favor or better treatment than that accorded other persons."

Maj. Enoch B. Garey, superintendent of State police, did not divulge details of the charges.

Troopers accused were Sergt. A. E. Markley, Corpl. J. E. Wheeler, Officer J. J. Thompson and Officer J. J. Taylor.

Each charge stated:

"That the employe has taken for personal use a fee, gift, or other valuable thing in the course of his work in connection with it when such fee, gift or other valuable thing is given him by any person in the hope or expectation of receiving a favor or better treatment than that accorded other persons."

All of the troopers were attached to the Laurel sub-station, where Sergt. Markley has been in command for about three years.

Admiral Sims Dead; Chief of Fleet in War

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 28.—Rear Admiral William S. Sims, war-time commander of the American fleet in European waters, died at a daughter's home here today following a heart attack.

The retired naval officer, who would have been 78 years old on October 15, underwent an operation in June and appeared to be regaining his health, Mrs. Robert Hopkins, the daughter at whose home he died, said he suffered the heart attack yesterday but lingered until today.

Sims will be buried with naval honors Thursday in Arlington Cemetery.

The admiral is survived by his wife, the former Anne Hitchcock, of St. Louis; three daughters, Mrs. Hopkins, Mrs. Robert Fiske, Mrs. Elting Morison, and two sons, William Sowden, jr., and Ethan.

Rear Admiral William Sowden Sims, who taught the American Navy how to shoot, was for more than 20 years one of the most eruptive and at the same time perhaps one of the most constructive figures ever identified with the naval

Unable, apparently, to abide by the tradition that a naval officer should execute orders and hold his tongue, Admiral Sims was almost

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee yesterday ordered immediate investigation of alleged political coercion, intimidation and other irregularities in the conduct of the Work Progress Administration in Pennsylvania.

The inquiry, which grew out of widespread Republican charges that WPA funds are being used for partisan purposes in the Keystone State, will be joined with an investigation already begun into "alleged coercion of industrial employes" in the State.

Senator Augustine Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut, chairman of the Campaign Expenditures Committee, declared the charges of "industrial coercion" directed mainly at two steel companies, were "justified." He said he had 27 affidavits to attest it. Several of the affidavits referred to former campaigns. Lonergan read only one relating to the approaching elections.

Testimony by Davis.

The committee voted to study alleged WPA campaign activity in Pennsylvania after hearing testimony by Senator James J. Davis, Republican, who previously had made broad charges in a letter to Lonergan. Davis read one affidavit obtained from a WPA timekeeper. The signer, Jack Dathe, of Easton, Pa., said he was told by his foreman on a WPA job that he would be discharged if he failed to contribute to the Democratic campaign in the State.

Indications were that the findings of investigators would not be made public before the November elections. Asked when a report would be ready, Lonergan pointed out that the elections are only five weeks off.

Louis Glavis, who with ten assistants has been investigating the recent Maine elections, from which the Administration drew little solace, may report to the committee today. Members of the Senate committee said they "will remain here for the rest of the week for further developments, upon call of the chairman."

Committee Undecided.

Longergan said the committee was undecided on whether to hold hearings on charges of Pennsylvania

Bloc in France Fights to Alter Monetary Plans

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Paris, Sept. 28.—The French government today started to drive its franc devaluation program through Parliament against bitter radical opposition to a sliding-wage plan designed to alleviate hardship which a lower-priced franc might bring to the workers.

Meanwhile, other members of the European gold bloc acted to perfect devaluation plans, and European nations generally were devising arrangements for their currencies when the policy goes through.

Premier Leon Blum was forced to give ground on the sliding-scale proposal and offered to withdraw the measure in favor of one giving the government the right to stop speculation by decree. But the government won its first test, that of an opposition move to return the entire program to commission for study. This was defeated, 285 to 248.

The wage proposal still was in question. Radicals had even threatened to withdraw their members from the cabinet if the sliding-wage plan was pushed. They voted in caucus to support the government plan, but oppose the sliding-scale wage plan. It was considered likely that they would be agreeable to the latest Blum move for speculation control, but Communists may not approve such a move.

Developments in other world centers on the monetary crisis included:

Amsterdam—Premier Hendrik Colyin confirmed that Holland is temporarily abandoning the gold standard, taking the same position as in 1914 and 1925. He announced by radio that a stabilization fund of 3,000,000,000 guilders was being formed. He avoided the word "devaluation," but it is believed that a small reduction will be made in the value of the guilder. The nation will adhere to the tripartite accord, he said, but he expected little result. The government plans to introduce a bill to prevent soaring prices, and will deal harshly with offenders. Stock markets will reopen tomorrow. In unofficial trading shares rose today. The clearing institute will be closed to all currencies until the situation is clarified.

Switzerland—Pared the franc 30 per cent and imposed decrees against price raises and increased cost of living.

Italy—The government ordered the bourse closed Monday, Tuesday

Rebels Mass For Big Push To End War

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 28.—Coldly confident rebel conquerors of Toledo tonight massed their troops for what they hoped would be a final campaign to take Madrid, 40 miles north, and end the Spanish civil war.

Their ranks swelled by the haggard Fascists rescued from the long-besieged Alcazar, the insurgent troops methodically set about scotching the last government resistance in the immediate vicinity.

(All but 80 of the original 1,200 men, women and children who fled to refuge in the Alcazar, were rescued, official insurgent reports reaching Talavera de la Reina stated. Some 500 of the besieged rebels and their families were wounded, it was said.)

Survivors Cheered.

Cheered hysterically and embraced by their comrades, the bearded Alcazar defenders begged permission to incorporate themselves in the legions of Gen. Francisco Franco to "be in on the kill" at Madrid.

Their plea was granted.

(Rudolf Hess, German minister without portfolio, sent a telegram to Toledo, it was announced in Berlin tonight, which said "The National Socialist Party of Germany sends the heroes of the Alcazar and their rescuers its heartiest congratulations.")

The fall of Madrid tonight was a matter of time, the insurgent military command proclaimed.

First, the generals said, they would rest their troops and clean out a few scattered government redoubts around Toledo.

Then, they said, they would roll on Madrid and the Spanish civil war would be over before the cold weather set in.

"The enemy may now be considered vanquished," said one announcement. Gen. Queipo Dellano, speaking by radio from Seville, predicted that now "Spain would quickly be freed."

The main body of Gen. Franco's troops was pouring into Toledo tonight and it was planned to complete rebel occupation of the city before morning.

Militiamen Flee.

Harried government militiamen fled in all directions—those who took the road to Madrid were methodically blocked off by rebel detachments stationed along the road for just that purpose.

While rebel elements in Toledo's populace danced in the streets which a few hours before had been the scenes of death and destruction, the rebel leaders in conferences laid their plans for a concerted Madrid assault.

The strategy was to draw the picked legions of Gen. Franco tightly around the southwestern approaches to Madrid, while Gen. Emilio Mola, the conqueror of Irun and San Sebastian, put on the pressure from the north.

Rebel leaders tonight smiled depreciatingly when asked what resistance they expected against their Madrid advance.

With raised palms they pointed out that their disciplined fighting men had swept through the streets of Toledo Sunday night just half an hour after they had been given the command to advance.

Hundreds Slain.

In disarray, the motley government militiamen broke and fled before the precision of the insurgent attack. Some of the erstwhile defenders ran back across the Tagus

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Sept. 28.—Lawrence B. Simpson, American seaman who languished 14 months in a German jail awaiting trial, was convicted today of sedition and sent back to prison for the balance of a three-year term.

Simpson admitted freely he and three German Communist friends had conspired to set up a Popular Front government in Germany and had smuggled anti-Nazi propaganda into the country.

The trial was brief. The presiding justice of the People's Court said he was showing "lenience," and warned other foreigners caught spreading subversive doctrine in Germany would receive "harsh treatment."

Father Assails Verdict.

(In Seattle, John G. Simpson, 70-year-old father of the prisoner, said he considered the conviction and sentence an "outrage.")

Slight and partly deaf, Simpson stood clutching a chair while he testified in fluent German, frequently bending forward to hear the prosecutor's questions. He was a seaman on the S. S. Manhattan when arrested 14 months ago.

He told his story to a court consisting of the presiding judge, an assessor, a high-ranking police officer and two brown-uniformed Nazi Party functionaries.

Simpson said his plan failed because one of his colleagues turned out to be a spy for the Gestapo (German secret political police).

Admits Smuggling.

Willingly telling his story, Simpson admitted he had smuggled three small balloons into Germany with a fireworks device for releasing handbills. He also said he had brought in 60,000 "Death to Fascism" stickers on one occasion.

He denied, however, he had been given secret data on German submarine and airplane construction, as one witness testified, and an espionage charge against him was dropped as unproved, at the prosecutor's request.

To Expand Campaign.

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Miss Anna Damon, acting national secretary of the International Labor Defense, today announced the organization would expand its campaign to obtain the freedom of Lawrence Simpson, sentenced to prison in Germany for a political offense.

"Picketing of Nazi consulates," she said, "stoppages of work on the unloading of Nazi ships, one-day strikes on American ships, and a general campaign directed to the State Department, demanding real diplomatic action, are activities on Simpson's behalf already under way in many ports.

"They will be developed to an even greater extent until Simpson is freed."

Sen. Smith, Bolter At Party Session, Senses G.O.P. Tide

By the Associated Press.

Senator Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, who walked out of the Democratic National Convention protesting the participation of colored persons, returned to the Capital yesterday, explaining that he came to "look over the atmosphere."

After looking it over, he told newspapermen:

"There are simply more Republicans than Democrats in this country and many of the big boys who swung to Roosevelt in 1932 are swinging back this year," the veteran Senator added.

Asked for his stand in the Presidential campaign, Smith said:

"I am a Democrat and I shall uphold and support the principles of Democracy and do all within my power to have real Democracy prevail."

300 Arrested As U.S. Opens War on Dope

Evaders of Liquor Tax, Counterfeiters Also Sought in Drive.

Striking from Hawaii to Florida, and from Maine to Alaska, Treasury agents yesterday launched a sweeping campaign against violators of the narcotics, liquor tax, customs and counterfeiting laws, and last night had arrested more than 300 men and women.

Participating in the drive were 2,500 enforcement agents, who rounded up the suspects in more than 50 cities.

The drive was one of the Treasury's periodic offensives against law breakers. It was ordered by Harold N. Graves, assistant to Secretary Morgenthau and general co-ordinator of the Treasury's law enforcement agencies.

26 Seized in Richmond.

In Richmond, Va., 26 persons were arrested. Eight of them were charged with violation of the Harrison narcotic act, and the remaining 16 with being persons "not of good fame."

The largest number of narcotics arrests occurred in Texas, where 149 persons were taken into custody on narcotic peddling charges. A quantity of marihuana was seized at San Antonio, officials reported.

Two parole violators were among those arested in Texas. Another was seized in Toledo, Ohio.

The Texas arrests, officials said, were made largely in San Antonio, Fort Worth, Houston and Wichita Falls.

Others Arrested.

Two alleged narcotics peddlers were arrested in Philadelphia and five in Pittsburgh. Seventeen were taken into custody in Asheville, N. C., the Associated Press reported early today. Nine were seized at Clarksburg, W. Va.; 21 in Tennessee and Kentucky and 23 in Michigan.

Toledo, Ohio, was the scene of 20 arrests and 18 persons were taken into custody at Kansas City, Mo.

Other totals by States included Oklahoma, 4; Arkansas, 4; Washington, 14; Oregon, 7; Montana, 9; California, 21; New York, 8 and Boston, 5.

Spearhead for the drive was furnished by agents of the Narcotics Bureau and the alcohol tax unit. Backing them up were customs agents, the Coast Guard, and Secret Service men. All moved against counterfeiters and dope peddlers and other law violators simultaneously.

Heads of the Treasury's law enforcement bureaus spent last night in their offices receiving reports from inspectors and divisional chiefs on the progress of the national drive.

Whether Washington was to be included among the score or more cities where raids were scheduled was problematical last night. A number of suspects were apprehended here in last year's general cleanup. Metropolitan police declined to state in advance whether the Treasury had asked them to be prepared to lend assistance.

Drug, Liquor Tax.

Although every offense against Treasury-administered statutes will be covered in the roundup, Washington officials predicted the bulk of the arrests would involve the narcotics and liquor tax laws. Violations in those brackets far outnumber counterfeiting and smuggling cases.

Harold N. Graves, assistant to Secretary Morgenthau, is in direct charge of the drive in his capacity as co-ordinator of the department's several law-enforcement bureaus.

Blazes in Oregon Rage on, Menace Two More Towns

Lowland Dwellers Flee Texas Floods

Waco, Tex., Sept. 28 (AP).—Lowland dwellers of central and west Texas fled tonight before crests from a dozen wild streams for the second time in ten days.

Four were dead, refugees numbered thousands and damage soared into the millions as rivers and tributaries, fed by heavy autumnal rains, poured through fields and towns.

A new threat to life and property gathered in Milan County, where the Brazos and Little rivers converge. Lowland residents hurriedly evacuated the area as the Little River rose steadily.

Hundreds of families in Brown and McCulloch counties, who had returned to flood-scarred homes for rehabilitation work, fled in terror again today when the Colorado River threatened an encore of the disastrous rise of ten days ago.

9 Bodies Are Recovered; Winds Hold Fate of Other Villagers.

Forest Fire Situation.

At least nine were dead as forest fires raged over a 400,000-acre area in the Pacific Coast, menacing scores of communities. Property damage was in the millions.

20,000 Endangered.

By the Associated Press.

Marshfield, Oreg., Sept. 28.—The fate of the homes of 20,000 residents of flame-ravaged southwestern Oregon rested on winds tonight, after nine lives, and possibly 15 had been lost when forest fires laid waste the village of Bandon.

With many fires burning in a 400,000-acre area forest officials, both Federal and State, said it was "impossible" to say how many acres had been damaged.

A State policeman at the village of Coquille, glancing up at skies so black that day looked like night, voiced the fear of many:

"If the wind changes, God help this place and (nearby) Myrtle Point. They'll go like Bandon did."

The wind, however, had died down tonight, bringing encouragement to the 5,000 firefighters and hope that other cities would be spared the destruction that visited Bandon.

Bandon, in an hour Saturday night, was transformed from a pretty little coastal port south of here into an inferno in which virtually the entire population of 1,500 saw possessions of a lifetime go up in roaring flames.

Hundreds of Fires.

In the small coastal towns of Oregon and sections of northern California, literally hundreds of fires broke out, caused principally, in the opinion of Associate United States Forester F. H. Brundage, Portland, by burning of slashings—debris left from timber operations.

Among the sections menaced were some of the greatest timber treasures in the world—the century-old redwoods of northern California.

The central Oregon coastal region about Yachats, where auto camps and several other buildings were destroyed, and the northern California region looked anxiously at weather reports, but it was this seacoast section which faced all the perils of forest fires, traveling 7 or 8 miles an hour.

The skies were clearing about Bandon and there was nothing more to burn there, property estimated worth $1,500,000 having gone up in flames.

Here a fog lay over the city, thus stemming for the moment the advance of the flames on the largest of the southern Oregon coast cities and its sister town, North Bend, with their combined population of 10,000.

But at Coquille, 25 miles to the southeast and inland, a logging town of 3,000, and Myrtle Point, 15 miles farther on, a village of 1,500, the situation was grave.

Protection Zones Cut.

About the two towns the citizenry worked en masse with logging tractors to cut protective circles in brush and timber which, they hoped, would stop advancing flames.

They realized that their hours of gruelling labor would be but an idle gesture if a strong east wind sprang up, throwing out red-hot embers from the flaming tree tops for distances as great as 3 or 4 miles.

So tense was the population of the two towns, each surrounded by flames, that few would speak of the danger. For the most part the citizens went doggedly about the job of creating as much protection as possible, their eyes sore and red-rimmed from the dense smoke and their throats raw.

Lights burned throughout the day. In the worst sections smoke made it impossible to see more than 50 to 100 feet. Only the dull

Crash Kills 3, Snow Blankets Mountain Area

Blizzard Air Wreck Brings Death to 9; 17-Inch Fall in Denver.

By the United Press.

Denver, Colo., Sept. 28.—Three persons were killed today in the crash of a mail and passenger plane during a blinding snowstorm which already had taken six lives in the Rocky Mountain region's worst September blizzard. Those killed were C. H. Chidlaw, pilot, of El Paso, Tex., and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Elkins, of San Francisco, passengers.

The storm had reduced visibility and ceiling to a dangerous point. The plane took off from Trinidad, Colo., at 8:45 a. m. and was not reported until wreckage was discovered near Rattlesnake Buttes, 30 miles from Walsenburg, Colo., late this afternoon.

The plane, flying from El Paso, Tex., to Pueblo, was grounded by the three-day storm at Trinidad last night. George Treat and Erland Bush, farmers, found the plane tonight.

More than 26 inches of snow were recorded at several Colorado points and damage to telephone and telegraph wires, crops and trees was heavy. Highway and rail transportation were crippled in several regions. Denver was blanketed by a 17-inch snowfall.

The storm broke last Friday night with a gale which stirred up clouds of dust. Harry Pettinger, power company employe, was blown from a pole to his death while repairing a power line. Charles A. Sheeley was injured fatally when he walked into the side of an automobile during the blinding dust storm.

The storm extended from north of Denver into New Mexico on the south and ranged to the eastern section of the State and extended into western Kansas. The mountains and foothills east of the Continental Divide bore the brunt of the storm, while the western side of the divide had little snow.

Tear Gas Routs Ohio Students; Inquiry Set in Alabama Strike

By the Associated Press.

Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 28.—Gov. Bibb Graves sent official investigators to Walker County today to look into a "strike" of school patrons with the announcement that "the school children shall not be crucified to attain any end whatsoever."

Thousands of children stayed away from classrooms in protest over alleged discrimination against union teachers. The Governor named State Superintendent of Education J. J. Keller, Labor Commissioner Robert R. Moore and an assistant attorney general to make a report on the controversy.

Unconfirmed reports of sporadic picketing at schools in the rural areas of Walker County were circulated as the "strike" entered its second week.

Meanwhile, a grand jury assembled at Jasper and was charged by Judge R. L. Blanton that it was "duty bound" to examine the Walker County schools case and acquaint itself with Alabama's law on compulsory attendance by children between 10 and 18 years of age.

The school children were kept at home by parents in sympathy with the Central Labor Union, which charged discrimination against members of the American Federation of Classroom Teachers.

By the Associated Press.

Campbell, Ohio, Sept. 28.—High school officials sought some means of placating striking students tonight after two tear gas bombs broke up a demonstration of several hundred, but failed to bring them back into the school.

The students, protesting against the transfer of Michael Graban, a popular instructor, retired to a hill as the tear gas spread about them, returning later with their placards saying: "We want Graban."

Police Chief Frank Cunningham, who discharged the tear gas, said he had told the students to "go to school or go home." The chief said the strike was led by "outside agitators." Three youths were taken into custody, one of them, Cunningham said, was 24 years old and from New York.

Campbell is a suburb of Youngstown.

"I shot at the ground so I wouldn't hurt their eyes," Chief Cunningham said. Some of the boys and girls were coughing and sneezing as they ran to the hill, about 1,000 feet from the school.

About 1,000 students are enrolled at the school. Of this number approximately 200 attended classes today. Friday, all but about 100 refused to enter the school building and classes were suspended.

Cousin of Mrs. Simpson, Companion of King, Flouts Rumor Husband Plans Divorce Steps

The answer to what mysterious fascination "Wally" Simpson has for King Edward that other women apparently haven't got, was given yesterday by a Washington cousin, who has known the former Baltimore beauty since childhood and who has visited with her many times in London.

At the same time, the cousin, Mrs. Anne Suydam, said that published reports that Ernest Simpson was contemplating "taking up bachelor quarters" as a result of the persistent linking of his wife's name with that of the King was "completely news to me. I was thunderstruck. I simply can't believe there's anything in it."

The beauteous Wally, she said, is not only arrestingly handsome at 40, but is witty, charming and level-headed. "Beyond all that," she said, "Wally is blessed with an extraordinary vitality and personal glow. She radiates. Whenever one enters a room in which she is standing, her magnetism immediately flows into your consciousness. It is a subtle, difficult thing to describe, but it's as real as her jet black hair; no one is immune to it, and no one who feels it can resist."

Bessie Wallis Warfield Simpson is at present King Edward's house guest at Balmoral Castle in Scotland and has been with him almost continuously during the summer and fall seasons. She accompanied him on an imperial jaunt to the Riviera and the Aegean Seas in his yacht recently and was photographed here and there on the Mediterranean in gay moods with His Majesty.

MRS. ERNEST SIMPSON.

Is His "Heart and Soul."

"Ernest is the only man Wally ever loved," Mrs. Suydam said positively. "Her whole heart and soul are his and when they are together they are the picture of adoration. They get along beautifully. In her home she has thoughts for no one else—at least, that was the case when I last saw them together."

Ernest Simpson, a London shipbroker, is highly "civilized" about his wife's relationship with the King and regards her appeal for the sovereign as something quite to be expected, Mrs. Suydam said. He is proud of her, trusts her and has no suspicion or jealousy, she said. "They understand each other, and that's what counts."

She went on to say that the King admires her for many things—her wit, her looks, her intelligence, "and don't forget she is a marvelous dancer and the King loves to dance. On the more

Landon Urges U. S. Aid Rolls Be Made Public

By the Associated Press.

Aboard Landon special en route to Topeka, Sept. 28.—Gov. Alf M. London closed a 1,600-mile farm belt campaign trip tonight with a series of talks demanding publicity of New Deal pay rolls, assailing social security taxes and pledging "elimination of waste" in spending.

"That's a lot of bunk," the heckler cried.

Gov. Landon stopped reading his address, paused a moment, and looking at the man, said, "It is not; you are wrong. Read the law; I cite only the facts."

From the rear platform as the sunflower special sped through Illinois, Iowa and Missouri toward Kansas, the Presidential nominee emphasized to farmers, factory workers and city folk:

That the Republican Party "proposes to continue a prosperous agriculture, believes in encouraging wise production, not nonproduction" and "did not see how in the long run" the big Tri-city farm implement industry in Moline, Rock Island and Davenport could "sell plows to farmers who are paid, as they have been by the present Administration, for not plowing."

That "taxation is the biggest middleman with whom the farm has to deal."

That "sweeping publicity" of Federal relief expenditures was "imperative."

That "elimination of waste, incompetence and political favoritism in the expenditure of relief money" was a primary step "in a program of constructive economy."

That the New Deal social security program, with what he termed "the largest tax bill in history," was "not my idea of social security."

Landon boarded his train at Byron, Ill., at 9:45 a. m. (Eastern standard time), after spending the night at former Gov. Frank O. Lowden's Sinnissippi farm.

He was introduced by Lowden to a rear-platform crowd as "eminently qualified both as to character and ability for the high office of President."

"If the people of the country exercise their good sense," the veteran Illinois leader said, "and there is increasing evidence that they are, I am now presenting to you the next President."

At Moline, Landon made a special reference to George N. Peek, who served the New Deal both as its first AAA administrator and as special adviser to President Roosevelt on foreign trade. Peek broke with Secretary Hull over the Administration's reciprocal tariff program which Landon has demanded be repealed, and tonight in a radio talk came out for Landon's election.

"I am happy to have this opportunity to speak in the home town of George Peek, who is so vigorously fighting the battle in the interest of American agriculture," the Kansan said.

"voter coercion." Prior to the time WPA was brought into the picture in charges made by Davis and the Republican National Committee, it was understood hearings would be held in the State on "industrial coercion" allegations.

In a statement issued following yesterday's committee meeting, Lonergan said:

"Charges by the Republican National Committee and others will be referred to Glavis before the committee gives any consideration to holding hearings thereon."

The special Senate inquisitorial body yesterday looked into alleged campaign interference in two other States—Michigan and Texas.

Charges that mail franking privileges had been "misused" by Democrats in the Michigan campaign were referred to the Postoffice Department, which was asked to make an official report "covering all similar charges previously placed with the department and those submitted to the committee.

Decision to investigate WPA's alleged political activity was reached before the committee received a telegram from Chairman John D. M. Hamilton of the Republican National Committee, asking whether the investigators "have the temerity to ignore the debauch of Pennsylvania by the New Deal," Lonergan asserted. He said the committee was called to meet on receipt of a letter from Davis making similar charges.

Hamilton in his telegram declared that in Pennsylvania "the helpless and unemployed, the destitute and the hungry are being victimized by the New Deal bureaucrats, who demand political allegiance as the price of bread."

Morgenthau's Currency Accord Actions Inspire Inquiry: 'What Price Gentlemen's Agreement.'

By Franklyn Waltman

LAUDATORY as the American-British-French currency accord is from the viewpoint of trying to halt the trend of international throat-slicing in the monetary field, sober reflection dictates the thought that some consideration should be given to where we are going in this particular field.

WALTMAN.

The identic statements issued in Washington, Paris and London, announcing the accord and termed by Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau as "a gentlemen's agreement," were more successful in veiling the exact terms and scope of the undertaking to which this Government was obligating itself than in exposing it.

This Government's official declaration of its intention "to continue to use appropriate available resources so as to avoid as far as possible any disturbance of the basis of international exchange resulting from the proposed readjustment" of the franc, unless limited by understandings not yet made public, verges on the signing of a blank check on the American Treasury.

More disturbing than helpful to those trying realistically to appraise this Government's position were Secretary Morgenthau's subsequent action and statements, particularly in the matter of the Treasury's much publicized purchase of the British pounds offered for sale on the New York market on Saturday—which was peculiar, to say the least.

In that incident Secretary Morgenthau—avowedly without knowing exactly the forces with which he was dealing—sought to make a dramatic event out of the coincidence of the new monetary accord announcement with what is claimed and now appears to be a legitimate financial transaction by the Russians. With American stabilization fund money, he rushed into the market and grabbed up the Soviet offering—and then hastened to tell the world how promptly and bravely he had overcome the wicked Russian plot.

Only two plausible explanations for Mr. Morgenthau's action have been suggested. One is that he saw an opportunity to make political capital out of the innocent action of the Soviets by seeking to make it appear that the Roosevelt Administration was fighting the Communist government of Russia—a sly stroke in view of the recent campaign developments which placed Mr. Roosevelt in the uncomfortable position of being supported by American Communists.

The other explanation is that Mr. Morgenthau used the Russian transaction, with the subsequent publicity which he gave to it, to demonstrate to the world that this Government was determined to come to the assistance of the British pound—or the franc—whenever those currencies became distressed. In other words, this Government was giving notice that it stood ready to guarantee the present international value of the British pound, even though it has not been attached to any particular gold content and none knows how French revaluation will come out.

If the first explanation is correct, then Secretary Morgenthau was engaging in a piece of cheap and shoddy politics in connection with a matter of vital importance. If that is incorrect and the second explanation is the proper appraisal of his motives, then the Administration owes it to the country to make known more specifically than it has done exactly what obligation this Government has assumed.

In this connection a statement made by Secretary Morgenthau in connection with his disclosure of the sale of British pounds by the Russians was significant. Aked "How far are you willing to go on this thing?" he replied "the limit."

"Which is what?" he was asked.

"Two billion dollars less $5,000,000," he replied, citing the total of the American stabilization fund, less the sum spent that day in purchase of the British pounds.

Since the advent of the New Deal we have become accustomed to letting astronomical figures roll off our tongues, and we are apt to fail to appreciate that an international agreement in which $2,000,000,000 of our money is involved is one of extraordinary proportions, and one about which we are entitled to know some of the details, particularly since this Administration's experiments in the money field do not inspire confidence in the infallibility of its judgment.

Efforts to get such details from the Treasury have not been successful. When pressed for the limitations of the tripartite accord, Secretary Morgenthau takes refuge in asserting that the whole arrangement rests on a "gentlemen's agreement;" that he would "rather have a gentlemen's agreement based on mutual good faith than any number of signed ones," and that, as he said yesterday, "there is nothing in writing; it is purely a matter of honor and faith among nations."

All of which sounds very grand and noble. But in international affairs there is nothing so illusive and deceptive as a moral obligation, because it leaves each nation to render judgment on what was expected of the other. There is no question about bad faith in the beginning. Obviously all three governments hope for the success of their common undertaking.

But as a matter of realism, suppose the revaluation of the franc and this monetary accord fails to result in the desired stability; suppose this new spirit of cooperation has come too late to save France from political chaos and the overturn of the existing order—and nobody can be dogmatic about such matters any more—where is this Government's obligation to end?

After pledging itself through its chief financial officer to go "the limit," can this Government withdraw as a matter of "honor and faith" if a few weeks hence it sees that the objective cannot be attained, even though the breath of life remains in France? Perhaps none of these things will happen; perhaps the currency accord will be a "turning point" in world affairs. But surely this country should proceed with its eyes open—it should know the answer to "what price gentlemen's agreements."

Truck Owner Is Held With Driver in Accident

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Magistrate Gustav Nieboldt, sitting in Jamaica Court today, ordered held for the grand jury on a charge of homicide the owner of a truck involved in a fatal accident although the owner was not on the truck at the time.

"In the court's opinion," he said, "the owner of a truck that is sent out onto the highways with defective brakes is at least equally responsible for injury or death to a pedestrian with the driver. Often the driver knows his truck is defective, but he must take it out or lose his job. It is the court's opinion that in such cases the owner rather than the driver should stand trial."

Those ordered held were Louis Washington, colored truck driver, and Isadore Rauch, the owner.

'Bike-Plane' Trips Planned

Boston, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—"Bike-plane" trips, modeled after the popular "bike-trains," will be introduced tomorrow when a giant 21-passenger American airliner leaves Boston airport with a party of debutantes and their bicycles aboard. The debs will land at Hillsgrove, R. I., pedal around the countryside and fly back to Boston.

Final Touches Put on Speech By President

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 28.—President Roosevelt fashioned tonight the address with which he will publicly take personal command tomorrow of his campaign for re-election.

Before the New York State Democratic convention at Syracuse and a Nation-wide radio audience, the President will voice what is expected to be his first formal challenge to political foes since his Philadelphia acceptance speech early in June.

To what extent national issues would be injected into the address, Roosevelt's assistants declined to predict. Originally the speech was to have been restricted largely to State politics. But White House officials intimated its range probably would be expanded since it would be the first Presidential pre-election speech allowed to carry a definite political label.

They called attention to the fact that national radio networks would carry the Presidential remarks—at approximately 9 p. m. (Eastern standard time).

Others who have seen the President lately said the speech would be of National import; that it probably would touch upon some issues already raised by Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, and include a general discussion laying the ground work for addresses on specific subjects later on, such as finances, agriculture and relief.

To hold the day open for work on the Syracuse address and another major political speech at Pittsburgh Thursday night, Roosevelt made only one appointment. That was with Clifford Miller, who lives a few miles from the Roosevelt estate and was called an "old friend" of the family.

While he works with words, a telephone on the desk in the small study of his Dutchess County home kept him in close touch with the latest turns the foreign situation was taking, including those bearing on the monetary agreement among Great Britain, France and the United States. But neither from him nor from Secretary Morgenthau at his estate near Peekskill was there any comment.

When the President's special train pulls out for Syracuse tomorrow shortly before noon, it will signal the start of a series of trips expected to keep Roosevelt on the go almost continuously until he returns here to receive election returns November 3.

He will be back in Hyde Park Friday night, but indicated that it might be for no more than 24 hours.

In the interim he will go to Washington Wednesday for three official conferences; stop by at a mountain State forest festival at Elkins, W. Va., on the way to the Pittsburgh speaking engagement Thursday, and on Friday dedicate a medical center at Jersey City, N. J.; attend a World Series ball game in New York and observe the breaking of ground for New York City's Queens-Manhattan tunnel.

In addition, he has arranged four appearances on the rear platform of his train as it passes through West Virginia and Pennsylvania Thursday.

The next trip, for which an itinerary may be announced in Washington Wednesday, is expected to take Mr. Roosevelt to Omaha and Denver for major speeches.

White House spokesmen said the President, before leaving tomorrow, would receive a delegation of 12 educators who will present a "testimonial of appreciation" for the work done during the Administration toward maintenance of educational standards and equipment during the depression.

The group will represent a committee on public school education of the Good Neighbor League, a pro-Roosevelt organization headed by Stanlty High.

The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 28 (AP).—The National Jeffersonian Democrats, an organization opposed to the re-election of President Roosevelt, announced tonight Gov. Alfred E. Smith had accepted its invitation to speak in Chicago on the night of October 22 "under the immediate auspices of a group of Illinois Democrats."

The meeting will be held at the Chicago Civic Opera House, the announcement said, and the address will be broadcast over a national radio hook-up.

* * * *

Boston, Sept. 28 (AP).—James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, asserted his belief today the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin was "absolutely sincere" in his opposition to the New Deal.

"As a citizen of this Nation he is entitled to his opinion. He also has the right to voice that opinion," Roosevelt added. His speech was broadcast.

"However, it would seem obvious that there are only two men who have a real chance of being elected President in November, * * * the Republican candidate, Alfred Landon; and the Democratic candidate, my father.

"Therefore a vote which ordinarily would go to the Democratic candidate and is given to a third party candidate is directly a vote to further the election of the Republican candidate."

Father Coughlin has advocated the election of United States Representative William Lemke, of North Dakota, Union Party candidate for President.

* * * *

Weston, W. Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—Rush D. Holt, West Virginia's junior Democratic Senator, asserted tonight he has not declared himself a supporter of Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee.

The 30-year-old Senator, who had a luncheon engagement with Gov. Landon in Topeka three weeks ago, referred to a statement made Saturday in Chicago by Col. Frank Knox, Republican candidate for Vice President.

Knox said, referring to West Virginia:

Holt said tonight:

* * * *

Emporia, Kans., Sept. 28 (AP).—Charles M. Hay, of St. Louis, an assistant U. S. Attorney General, declared tonight that Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, had "changed front from an almost 100 per cent supporter of the New Deal to its severe critic."

In a prepared speech, the first of a series he was scheduled to deliver in Kansas this week in behalf of President Roosevelt, Hay said that in 1933, Gov. Landon joined with Governors of other Midwestern States in urging a farm program which proposed "regulations far beyond the regulations of the AAA."

"It is inconceivable to me," Hay said, "that one who not only approved and co-operated with the AAA, but went so far as to approve a program calling for the exercise of even greater Federal power should now join the forces of those who have never, at heart, favored any effective Goverment action in aid of agriculture."

* * * *

Boston, Sept. 28 (AP).—Mayor Robert E. Greenwood, of Fitchburg, who had entered the United States Senatorial fight in Massachusetts with the avowed purpose of defeating Gov. James M. Curley, Democrat, withdrew today as an independent candidate.

Greenwood said he would campaign for the re-election of President Roosevelt and the election of Charles F. Hurley, Democratic nominee for Governor, but would refrain from speaking in the Senatorial fight in which Curley seeks the seat of Greenwood's father-in-law, Marcus A. Coolidge, a Democrat who did not seek re-election.

Meanwhile, the Massachusetts ballot law commission today dismissed a protest filed against the candidacy of Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., Republican nominee for United States Senator.

Former State Auditor Alonzo B. Cook, an independent candidate for Senator, protested there was no such person as "Henry Cabot Lodge, jr." But Attorney General Paul A. Dever said Cook's protest raised "no adequate legal cause" to remove Lodge's name from the ballot."

Cook contended Lodge, the grandson of Henry Cabot Lodge, was the son of George Cabot Lodge and therefore could not legally use the suffix "junior." Lodge, however, pointed out that he was christened "junior."

* * * *

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Daniel W. Hoan, Milwaukee's veteran Socialist mayor, today said he believes the Middle West holds the foundations of a third party movement which eventually will spread Nation-wide.

"Any great labor movement must have its roots in the West," said Hoan in an interview. "Out there, men have colonial individuality—they are not going to be led by the noses.

Hitherto, independent party movements have been based on one man—a Moses guaranteeing to lead his flock out of the promised land. But that is not democracy, and it cannot be a success in the United States.

"The people themselves must demand, originate and direct such a movement."

* * * *

Chicago, Sept. 28 (AP).—Former Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, will make a two-week tour of the Midwest and West making campaign speeches for Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, Republican Presidential nominee, the speakers bureau of the Republican national committee announced tonight.

Among addresses scheduled for him were those at Cleveland, October 5; at Battlecreek, Mich, Ocober 16, and in northern Indiana, October 17.

Peek Will Back Landon; Cites His Farm Stand

Former AAA Head Charges Roosevelt 'Broke Faith' on Program.

George N. Peek, former head of the AAA and later head of the Administration's Export-Import Bank and foreign trade adviser to the President, last night announced he would support Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican nominee, for the Presidency.

Speaking on the William Hard radio period under auspices of the Republican National Committee, Peek charged the Administration with having broken promises to agriculture, and declared, after citing Landon's campaign pledges, "I believe that Gov. Landon is the kind of a man who keeps his promises; that is his record."

The Administration's tariff-trading policy, Peek said, had "prevented important sales of farm products" abroad and the State and Agriculture departments had ruled against farmers' interests "in every instance."

"As a result of these policies American gross farm income lags at $8,000,000,000 a year, whereas during the twenties, which were lean years for agriculture, farm income averaged $11,000,000,000 yearly. I cannot believe that $500,000,000 in Government checks is adequate return for $3,000,000,000 loss in income.

"Fooled by Promises."

"Others may say that I am being fooled by Republican promises which will quickly be broken. My reply is—I was fooled by President Roosevelt's promises. I believe that Gov. Landon is the kind of man who keeps his promises; that is his record."

Peek contended Roosevelt had not abided by pledges in the 1932 campaign against reduction of farm tariffs, favoring expansion of markets for surpluses "through Yankee trading," and for "a tariff benefit on export crops, the price of which was determined by world markets."

The Administration farm program, however, was defended by former Senator Smith W. Brookhart, of Iowa, and Senator Hugo Black of Alabama.

Brookhart, at Mankato, Minn., declared in a speech that Gov. Landon's "farm bounty plan" would result in lower farm prices. Of the bill which he said the Republican nominee had Representative Hope, of Kansas, introduce at the last session of Congress, Brookhart stated:

"This means that the farmer will get 30 cents for his corn in the market and a 6-cent bounty. He will get 3 cents for his hogs and a six-tenths of 1 cent bounty. He will get 6 cents for his cotton and 1.2 cents bounty. Instead of family homes, this means family hovels for farmers."

Senator Black, at Minneapolis, defended the reciprocal trade agreements of the Administration, and replied to Gov. Landon's Minneapolis talk attacking the program. He declared that the Canadian trade agreement did not "hurt our farmers," has not "taken most of his markets away, both at home and abroad," and has not "prevented him from getting the prices he otherwise would."

Import Data Cited.

Meanwhile, officials of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics upheld the farm and trade policies of the President with the assertion that larger farm imports in the last two years have been a factor in reviving prosperity and higher prices, rather than a cause of injury to the farmers. Statistics given the United Press were designed to show that despite abnormal needs due to drought in 1934 and 1936, total agricultural imports are still far below predrepression levels, and that a considerable share of current imports are directly to the advantage of the American farmers and livestockmen, such as the imports of foreign corn and livestock feeds of various kinds.

Dr. A. G. Black, chief of the bureau, also announced that a study had shown that the Nation's current food supply is about 3 per cent less than the amount actually used during the 1935-36 season, and 8 per cent less than the 1925-29 average per capita supply. Supplies of meat, poultry and lard are greater than a year ago, the wheat supply is about the same, but fruits and vegetables are less.

Trolley Car Kills Man Near Rosslyn

Chapin King, 30, of Arlington, Va., was injured fatally late yesterday when he was struck by an Old Dominion trolley car near Rosslyn, Va.

He was taken to Georgetown Hospital. One foot was amputated by the wheels of the car and the other crushed. King died a few hours after being admitted to the emergency room.

Police did not learn details of the accident, but said last night they understood the victim had been on the right of way and apparently had not heard the approaching tram.

New Ireland, Emerging From Ashes of Past, Described by U. S. Envoy, Ending Stay Here

By Liam Lenihan.

Whirring dynamoes humming where once banshees wailed; vast acreages under wheat where only fairies once danced; the mark of ploughshares on the soil once burdened by endless wars—that was the story told yesterday of the New Ireland that has arisen, phoenix-like, out of the ashes of a timeless past.

ALVIN MANSFIELD OWSLEY.

Returning to his post in Dublin after a two-month visit to his home in Texas, genial Alvin Mansfield Owsley, Uncle Sam's accredited Minister of the Irish Free State, told of an economic and social revolution achieved there without bloodshed, that overnight changed "the most distressful country" into a real "emerald gem of the west."

"Ireland is a subject of which I never tire of talking," the stocky Texan said. "Out of the dark caverns of the yesteryear a new land has emerged. And this new land has much to be proud of. Its credit rating is A-1; it is solvent and its budget is balanced—a too, too rare thing, indeed, in the frenzied financing of our day."

Asked if the "economic war" with England and the policy of self-sufficiency now pursued by the De Valera government had not caused serious repercussions, Owsley replied:

"While not free to discuss the internal situation of the Free State, I can say without reservations that the tension is lessening. Last year Ireland bought all of her coal and 51 per cent of her cement from England. That, surely, would indicate a better understanding between both lands."

That the "Shannon Scheme"—the Irish equivalent to TVA—has played a big part in this national rebirth few will question, the minister declared.

"Public service must be within the reach of the masses," he said. "Private concerns did not have the capital to finance that gigantic project and the government had to step in. But it does not compete with business and that, to my way of thinking, is an essential of democracy."

Speaking of democracies, Minister Owsley emphatically denied that Eamonn de Valerie has dictatorial pretensions. This was in answer to the charges raised in some quarters that with the abolition of the Senate the Free State's chief executive could now ride roughshod over the opposition, using his cabinet and Fianna Fail Party as rubber stamps.

"President de Valera is a leader—a gallant one," the diplomat declared. "Not only do I cherish him as a friend, but I admire him as a great statesman. He has all the endearing qualities of Woodrow Wilson, of whom he reminds me quite a bit—all the ideals, all the vision, the humaneness of purpose. The Free State may well be proud of him, for he faithfully guards Erin's destiny."

The ministry to the Free State is a diplomatic prize, according to the Texan. Housed in beautiful quarters in far-famed Phoenix Park, the legation quarters are one of the best of American diplomatic residences abroad.

"We are self-supporting, too," Minister Owsley said with a twinkle. "We have our own Irish horses, our Kerry cows, our produce. Quite in keeping, you see, with the tempo of the Irish tune."

Other tales were told of the reborn Ireland. Of a Dublin that is still Georgian, but modern and clean. Of squalid slums that have been torn down and replaced with decent workers' quarters. Of smoke stacks and wheat fields and happy shouting in the Shannon Valley. In short, of an Ireland where youth look no more to the far-off lands of the western seas, but now gazes on the mist-swept hills where their forbears struggled, fired by a new courage and an undying hope.

Cousin Flouts Simpson Divorce Rumor

serious side there is another consideration. He sees in her a woman who is happily married and therefore a woman with whom he is safe. There can never be a marriage on either part and their friendship can continue on a friendship basis, without a lot of unwelcome complications."

Despite Mrs. Suydam's conviction that all was well in the Simpson menage, the Associated Press yesterday carried the information that Simpson was believed to be en route to the United States and that there were rumors that upon his return to London he would perhaps break with his wife. The rumor was largely based on a statement by his first wife, Mrs. Dorothea Parsons Simpson, head of a New York employment agency, who indicated that her former spouse was becoming "fed up" with the King's attachment for Wally.

"Very Dignified Person."

On this point, Mrs. Suydam said:

"Mrs. Simpson has been a companion to the King for about four years now. I think that having held off this long, Ernest would hardly start any legal action now. Besides, Ernest is a very dignified person. He would go about it in a very formal way. He would simply announce that he had moved to his club, or something of the kind, and would never make the announcement through his divorced wife. That is a little too preposterous."

However, Mrs. Suydam said that she was going to visit her aunt here, Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, as soon as possible, to discover if the aunt had learned anything she did not know about the rumors. Her aunt, she said, receives letters from Wally rather frequently.

Describing Wally's charms, which have made her the envy of a world of women, Mrs. Suydam said:

"Wally will always be young. She's the type who will never pass 35, even when she reaches 50. Her skin is smooth as a lotus petal and her lovely black hair is full of vitality. Her eyes, which are her most striking feature, are wide and taunting, the eyes of an extremely clever woman, who knows what she wants in this world, and gets it.

"Wally never was a woman to be hampered by convention. As a young girl in Baltimore she was unfortunately not so well off as some of the other debs, though her family was socially the best. But she dominated every dance, every party. The boys would flock around her then and they still do.

"She was conscious of her charm. She couldn't very well help not being. Brainy as well as pretty, she never overlooked any chances and now she's where she wants to be. Wally is not a person of deep emotions. She is of the cool, inteleceual type, who never lets things get out of hand. That's one of the reason she's held her good looks so long—it's emotionalism that tears most women down."

Asked if it weren't true that no man, no matter how "civilized" he might consider himself and no matter how steeped in the Mayfair tradition, could permanently swallow the instinct of jealousy in the face of prolonged public gossip, Mrs. Suydam said:

"You never can tell. But my guess is that Ernest is above such gossip. What difference does it make to him what people say? He knows that his wife is pleased by the King's admiration, that she couldn't help but be and, as any good husband should, he suppresses his own impulses in order that the woman he loves shall have the most out of life, in her own way. Besides, he is sure of her. He knows that she really loves him and him alone. That's all there is to it."

Simpson, who married the Baltimore brunette after divorce from her first husband, Earl Winfield Spencer, of the United States Navy, has seldom been invited by Edward VIII, either as King or as Prince of Wales, to join the storybook larks which have taken him and Mrs. Simpson into the romantic excursions which only a king can provide.

On the other hand, Mrs. Suydam said Simpson has been host to the ruler of Britain many times at his smart London town house at informal cocktail parties.

Landon to Talk At Baltimore On October 27

Address Scheduled Week Before Election; Big Parade Planned.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 28.—The Maryland Republican State Central Committee announced today Gov. Alf M. Landon will make one of his closing campaign bids in an address here October 27, just one week prior to the Presidential election.

William P. Lawson, State Republican chairman, said a parade would escort the nominee to the Fifth Regiment Armyory, where the address will be delivered.

Selection of the date was not communicated directly to party headquarters here, Lawson said. He added that arrangements had been made with the major broadcasting companies for radio time at 9 p. m. on that date.

"We have not received a confirmation from Topeka," he said, "but that is the inference.

"We are awaiting definite instruction before going ahead with preparations for the meeting. We safely can say that the Fifth Regiment Armory will be jammed for Gov. Landon's address, and that he will be escorted to the armory by a parade."

Party headquarters was without information as to the duration of the Kansan's stay here, or the route to be followed on the tour. Col. Frank Knox, cnadidate for the Vice Presidency on the Landon ticket, will speak here October 8.

Democrats Chart Student Vote Drive

Richmond, Sept. 28 (AP).—State Democratic headquarters today announced plans for soliciting the support of an estimated 33,000 new voters in Virginia, centering on work among students of voting age in colleges and universities.

Horace Edwards, State campaign manager, said John Neff, of Staunton, college secretary for the Young Democrats of Virginia, and Lewis A. McMurran, of Newport News, head of the Roosevelt First Voters League of Virginia, already had launched this phase of the campaign.

He said students over 21 would be listed and an effort made to persuade them to vote the Roosevelt-Garner-Glass ticket.

The Democrats also completed plans today for a rally at Cumberland Courthouse tomorrow, where Representative Patrick H. Drewry, of Petersburg, will be the principal speaker. Mr. Drewry is head of the congressional committee of the party's national campaign.

Fire, Blasts Destroy Fuel.

York, Nebr., Sept. 28 (AP).—Fire and three explosions early today destroyed three fuel tanks and the warehouse of the L. L. Coryell Co. Six thousand gallons of fuel and 2,000 pounds of grease were destroyed, and L. L. Coryell, jr., of Lincoln, estimated the damage at "between $5,000 and $10,000."

and Wednesday. No plans for devaluation of the lira are being considered, it is indicated, but many believe the government will permit the lira to cheapen gradually and that the tourist lira particularly will be permitted to cheapen. Tourist offices today were refusing Swiss, Dutch and French exchanges.

Germany—Reichsbank central committee will meet Wednesday to hear Dr. Hjalmar Schacht report on the currency situation. No change is expected.

Greece—The drachma will be adjusted to the pound sterling instead of the franc and will be placed on a ratio of 540 to 550 to the sterling.

England—Gold rose to 140 shillings 9 pence, the highest in English money since May 2 but sterling dropped to $4.94 making the American equivalent lower. Stocks higher at opening of market under lead of gold mining issues. Excited early foreign exchange trading although no quotations on the French franc, Swiss franc and Holland guilder.

Debate on the devaluation program in the French Parliament was delayed early when various groups demanded time to study the measures after they had been presented by Finance Minister Vincent Auriol. Former Finance Minister Georges Bonnet attacked the government, doubting that the program had been long in preparation. The government announced negotiations were started in June.

Bonnet said he would vote for devaluation but insisted the government had not been long in preparation of the program because the recent unsuccessful baby bond sales would not have been attempted had negotiations been under way.

"Don't deceive the country," he said with regard to the tripartite accord. "It does not signify that England will stabilize the pound. She remains free to let it fluctuate as the accord contains assurances but no formal commitments."

He warned that the Mobile wage-scale is an admission "you expect an appreciable price rise which means failure of your operation." He said all categories of earners must be protected.

Paul Reynaud, the devaluation protagonist who is attributed with presenting the proposal in a recent visit in Washington, welcomed the tripartite accord as "the beginning of collaboration between France, the United States and Great Britain in an economic and social field." But he warned that the exchange stabilization fund must be carefully administered for an error would lead to disruption of the accord.

Meanwhile, the Bank of France announced—insisting that no gold embargo was in effect—that the minimum unit sale of gold would be 5,000,000,000 francs ($250,000,000 with the franc placed at 5 cents). Previously the minimum quantity sold was 215,000 francs ($10,750 with the france at 5 cents).

Mrs. Georgeanna Williams.

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 28.—Funeral services for Mrs. Georgeanna Williams, 79, widow of O. W. Williams, who died Saturday night at her home, 1700 Kemper street, were held today. Burial was in Presbyterian Cemetery.

Mrs. Williams was a native of Fredricksburg and a member of the Methodist Church there.

Rebels Massing For Final Drive To Crush Foes

Fascists Confident Madrid Capture, End of War Are Imminent.

Hundreds of government men were killed in the attack, rebel leaders announced, with the biggest losses at Bargas, 5 miles north of Toledo, through which the rebels knifed in their final assault on the former Spanish capital city.

Civilian residents fled with the government militiament, scattering over fields and country lanes, leaving their household belongings behind.

The advance, the Fascist leaders said, will be scientifically designed to join their north and south columns outside Madrid.

Bombardment of Madrid from the air was resorted to, and planes were droning away from half a dozen airports in the direction of Madrid.

Bilbao Bombarded.

San Sebastian, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—An insurgent column of 6,000 men launched a vicious bombardment of Bilbao today from artillery emplacements in the adjacent hills. The city was shelled for four hours, destroying numerous buildings and causing many deaths.

At the same time six rebel bombers from Burgos rained bombs on the city.

The bombardment came a few hours after the governor of the beleaguered city had threatened to execute 1,500 men, women and children hostages if the rebels again bombarded the city. More than 200 of the helpless prisoners were slaughtered by anarchist militiawomen Sunday in retaliation for a rebel aerial bombardment in which 150 loyalist civil guards were killed.

Before today's bombardment, rebel planes flew low over Bilbao, disregarding antiaircraft guns, and dropped thousands of leaflets offering "the second opportunity to save your city and your lives."

30 Killed by Bombs.

On the Oviedo Front, Spain, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—A government aerial bombing attack on beseiged Oviedo today killed more than 30 persons, including women and children, and ran deaths in the last few days from this source to 500.

Oviedo, under siege for 11 weeks by loyalists and dynamite-hurling Asturian miners, is the last besieged city which rebels must free.

All Men Mobilized.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 28.—The Spanish government tonight ordered every available man to the civil war front and answered rumors ruling officials had abandoned the capital with the explanation several ministers were away on a tour of inspection—but would return momentarily.

Striving to concentrate every effort toward a defense of Madrid against insurgents who yesterday captured Toledo, 40 miles south, the government today:

1. Suspended the rights of all public functionaries of ministries and executive departments. (Details of this action were censored but it was believed by some sources that a form of martial law might have been invoked.)

2. Called all militiamen to report to barracks for duty at once, and sent militiamen through suburbs summoning war-worthy males from breakfast tables with shouts: "Comrades to the front!"

Soviet Orders U. S. Flags Taken Off Car Fenders

Moscow, Sept. 28 (AP).—Loy W. Henderson, the American charge d'affaires, today became the only person in Moscow permitted to display an American flag. When a new ambassador arrives to take the place of William C. Bullitt, recently transferred to Paris, even Henderson will have to remove the flag.

American correspondents and others who display small flags on their car fenders were given final orders today to take them off, officials explaining it was illegal for any foreigner, except the head of a diplomatic mission, to enjoy such a privilege. Authorities explained such a display of the Stars and Stripes might give nondiplomats privileges to which they are not entitled.

Rescued Alcazar Defenders Weep With Joy After Loyalist Rout Ends 71 Days of Horror

By the Associated Press.

The 71-day nightmare of shot, shell and dynamite for the 1,200 besieged Fascists and their families in Toledo's Alcazar fortress was only a memory last night.

The insurgent captors of Toledo itself reported all but 80 stumbled from the blasted citadel alive. Some 500 of the men, women and children, they said, were wounded—some bleeding from shrapnel, some burned and others maimed by dynamite explosions.

Poison gas, the insurgents charged, had also been the daily lot of the besieged comrades, attacked almost incessantly by government militiamen and bombarded from land and air.

Tears of joy, they said, brimmed eyes widened by disbelief as the haggard defenders of the citadel scrambled over the debris, slipping and stumbling, cutting themsleves on the jagged ruins.

Beg to Join Drive.

They begged to be allowed to join their rescuers in the final march on Madrid, the reports said, and their pleas were granted by their leaders.

They wept, as the knowledge dawned on them that their starvation, agony of wounds and terror for their loved ones were at an end.

They danced, they embraced one another and their rescuers as they realized that no longer would their daily lot be one of horror—women and children huddling in dungeons, and men stumbling off to gunposts not knowing whether they would return.

They were hysterical, so the reports said, with the joy of never again having to call a living hell home.

There were those—government prisoners—who had managed to escape from the Alcazar, and told of the agony behind its walls.

They told of the hundreds of men, women and children having nothing to eat but rancid bread and horseflesh for more than 50 days.

They told of ammunition running low and of men willing to face certain death rather than surrender.

They told of pitiful lines of laundry strung along dungeon walls—the laundry washed but still soiled because there was no soap in the Alcazar.

The Fascist rescuers last night used the term "miraculous" to describe the escape from death of those whom they saved.

They said at least 9,000 three and four-inch shells had been fired into the Alcazar since the siege began.

That would be more than 125 bombs every day of the siege—ripping and blasting at the walls, men and women and children called home.

Bravery almost unbelievable, the Fascists termed it.

But there is another side of the story written in the papers of diplomatic files—the story of the anxiety of the world for those who elected to die with their families rather than surrender to their own countrymen.

Time and time again diplomats of the world besought the besieged Fascists to surrender their women and children.

The diplomats guaranteed safety for all noncombatants within the fortress—the male defenders were doomed to certain death before firing squads whatever they elected to do.

The answer was always the same—Never!

Sound trucks were wheeled to the fortress walls for broadcast surrender appeals. Bullets were the answer.

The government attackers likewise appealed to their foes to free the women and children. Maj. Juan Rojo, of the government forces, went alone, unarmed and blindfolded into the fortress to make a personal appeal.

He knew many of his childhood friends and schoolmates were in the room where he was granted audience. He called to them, by name.

There were no anwers, only a curt refusal to surrender anyone or anything, and he was escorted outside.

Then they tried artillery and air bombardments.

Bombed Fortress.

Finally the government, faced with Fascist legions marching on the very city itself to rescue their comrades, announced a "terrible decision."

The Alcazar would be blown to bits, and everyone in it, by simultaneous explosions of tons of dynamite.

More appeals for surrender. More defiant refusals.

Two mines, each more than 100 yards long and tamped full of TNT were set off.

But the dust and crumbling rock had not settled before the smoke was cut by machine-gun bullets from the deafened defenders.

The other mines were set off. Still bullets were the only answer.

With fixed bayonets the government militia stormed through the wreckage. Bayonets and bullets were their answer.

The crew of the lone machine gun could not hear the rumble of their comrades marching to their side at th every gates of Toledo.

Suddenly the machine gun stopped. There were no government militia attacking them. They were running back into other sections of the city. Shells were exploding. But not on the Alcazar. Men were charging, but not on the Alcazar.

Could it be——

Dynamite, 2 Men Seized In Lettuce Strike Area

Salinas, Calif., Sept. 28 (AP).—A truckload of dynamite, which authorities charged was headed for the Salinas lettuce strike area, was seized and two men were arrested today as representatives of 3,000 Filipino field workers announced they had joined the walkout of 3,200 union lettuce workers.

Sheriff George M. Smith of Placerville arrested James Moya, 29, and Bob Fay, 50, beside their stalled truck, which contained 1,300 pounds of dynamite and which the sheriff said was stolen from the Union Paving Co.

Alfred Aram, attorney for the striking fruit and vegetable workers, charged the alleged dynamite plot was "a frameup."

Hearst Interests Rebuffed.

Seattle, Sept. 28 (AP).—Examiner Edwin S. Smith, United States Labor Relations Board member, today refused Hearst interests' offer of proof that the striking Seattle chapter of the American Newspaper Guild stole telegrams exchanged by Ray Colvin, day managing editor of the strike-bound Post-Intelligencer, and Hearst executives in the East.

Litvinoff Calls Nazis, Fascists 'Foe of People'

Answers Reich Charges; Proposes European Peace Parley.

By the Associated Press.

Litvinoff, Russia's foreign commissar, today labeled Nazism and fascism "enemies of civilization," in a vehement reply to high Nazis' recent charges that Bolshevism was "world enemy No. 1."

The Soviet leader, in a vigorous defense of his country's desire for world peace, rose in the League of Nations Assembly and cried:

"They (nazism and fascism) are the deadly enemies of all working people and of civilization!"

He mentioned neither Chancellor Hitler nor Premier Mussolini by name, but delivered vitriolic attacks on those responsible for the doctrines of the Nazis and Fascists.

Russia, he asserted, was unalterably opposed to entry into the league of any nation with political rule "founded on racial and national inequality which describes all people except its own as sub-human."

Any state ruled by a man who indulges in territorial conquests, Litvinoff declared, was not acceptable to the League of Nations.

Especially should league doors be barred against countries whose leaders "enumerate vast territories which they intend violently to separate from other countries," he cried, apparently referring to Hitler's recent speech saying German prosperity would result "if we had" the Ukraine Valley of Russia.

Despite opposition to league admission of any such country, Litvinoff said his government stood ready to make agreements with even "the most aggressive countries," and recommended convocation of an European peace conference.

A Timely Book For Thinking Americans

Jefferson in Power

by Claude G. Bowers

$3.75

A sequel to "Jefferson and Hamilton"

Claude G. Bowers says: "It was a lusty period by no means so sedate as is the popular impression—a period of marching mobs, of rebellions more brazen than that of Shay . . . back room intrigues, of whispering campaigns and political assassinations . . .

"I have sought to recreate, as flesh and blood, the characters of the drama, and such characters! . . . Never has the stage of American history been so crowded with the picturesque, the clever and the profound.

"And I have tried to paint in the social background of their political activities, and to present a picture of the capital in the days when Jefferson sometimes received guests in carpet slippers . . . and when Turreau, French Minister, lashed his wife while his secretary played wildly on the fife to drown her screams.

"To tell the truth, as it appears to me; to disclose the leaders on both sides of the struggle in a disarray and covered with the sweat of conflict; to picture the actors off the stage and out of their full dress uniforms; to make them men and not mere steel engravings—such is the purpose of this story of Plutarchian days."

Landon's School's Record Assailed

The records of President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, in education and relief were compared by Mrs. Louise Galleher, national vice president of the Young Democrats of America, in an address before the Arlington County Women's Democratic Club last night.

While a naudience of about 250 listened in Washington and Lee High School, in Ballston, Mrs. Galleher said Mr. Roosevelt's expenditures for education and relief were a contrast to those of Mr. Landon, as Governor of Kansas.

She pointed out that there had been a general closing of schools in Kansas during the depression, and that many of the teachers earned as little as $10 a week.

"More than 8,000 children were forced to go without schooling," said Mrs. Galleher, "and the State dropped from fifteenth to twenty-seventh place in education on the "national scale."

Mrs. Galleher called for the re-election of the President on the strength of his record.

Foes Will Lose By Own Effort, Says Col. Knox

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 28.—Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, told the New York State Republican convention tonight that the Roosevelt Administration's leaders "have put themselves out."

"When the present Administration is overwhelmingly retired in November," Knox said in an address prepared for delivery before the Empire State organization, "you and I cannot claim much credit. The present Administration should get the credit.

"They have put themselves out."

Knox said he found "tremendous enthusiasm" for the Republican campaign in the campaign traveling which has already taken him more than 10,000 miles, into 23 States, in the last eight weeks.

Opposition newspapers, Knox told the New York convention, have said he was "too critical . . . too severe" in his attacks on the Roosevelt Administration. To this he replied:

Quotes Roosevelt's Acceptance.

He selected two phrases from President Roosevlt's Philadelphia acceptance speech to meet criticism that "we should look toward the future and let the past be forgotten."

The President quoted Dante, in his acceptance speech, as saying "Divine justice weighs the sins of the cold-blooded and the sins of the cold-hearted in different scales." Knox said:

"But I tell you," Knox said, "that the reckless blunders of the soft-headed are not weighed in any scales. They are paid for in the blood and sweat of the plain people."

Referring to another phrase from the same section of the President's speech, Knox said:

"This has been told us: 'Better the occasional faults of a Government that lives in a spirit of charity than the consistent omissions of a Government frozen in the ice of its own indifference.'

Errors Termed Perpetual.

"And I tell you that a Government which makes nothing but mistakes is an intolerable Government for any nation to have.

"We are told by the present Administration that it is building a temple out of faith, hope and charity. And I tell you it is a poor temple that is built on faith in Mr. Farley, hope that the people will not remember, and charity with other people's money.

"If attacks on the present Administration are resented, it is because the shoe fits—fits so tight it hurts. Some of the papers have suggested that we look toward the future, and let the past be forgotten. That is a natural desire. No administration in our history ever had less temptation to look back.

"This Administration * * * never has looked ahead and it dares not look back. Over its shoulder it can see ghosts pursuing it, the ghost of the NRA, the ghost of AAA, the ghost of CWA * * * the ghost of little pigs."

School Gradings By 'Effort' Urged

Nutley, N. J., Sept. 28 (AP).—Promotion will be based on effort—and dull pupils may get better marks than bright ones—if the Nutley board of education adopts the recommendation of John A. Spargo, superintendent of schools.

Spargo told the board each pupil should be judged according to his ability. Each should be promoted unless definitely subnormal or hopelessly indolent.

"A child's social growth is as important as his academic growth," explained Spargo, "and therefore it is wise to keep a pupil with classmates of his own age. We used to think book knowledge was all-important, but now we know that any student who can think clearly can succeed in high school, whether he remembers all the facts he was supposed to learn in grammar school or not."

Rich Widow Confesses Faking Holdup Story

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 28 (AP).—Detective Capt. James H. Bray announced today that the shooting of Mrs. Julia B. Smith, 70-year-old wealthy widow of Wilbur Brooks Smith, steel magnate, "was her own doing."

He said she repudiated her previous story that a colored burglar had shot her three times in the abdomen last night with a pistol because she refused to give up her jewels. Capt. Bray said the woman told him today she had taken a 40-year-old pistol from a bureau to look at it, and that her mind then went blank.

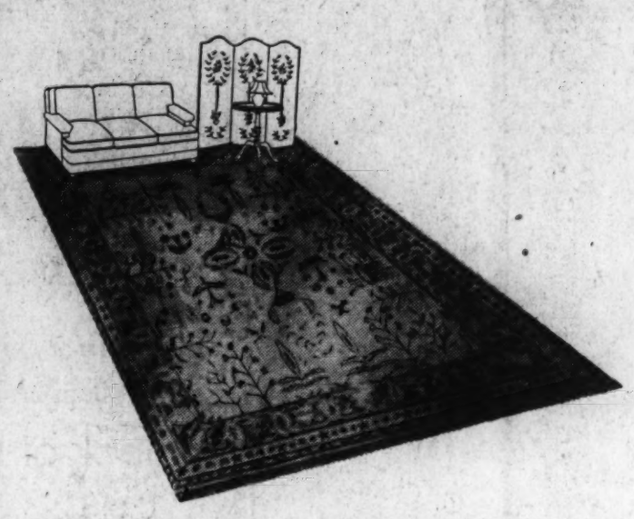
Great Britain Closes Consulate in Ethiopia

London, Sept. 28 (AP).—Great Britain is closing its consulate at Gore, in Western Ethiopia, which Haile Selassie claims is the real seat of the Ethiopian government, now that the Italians have captured Addis Ababa.

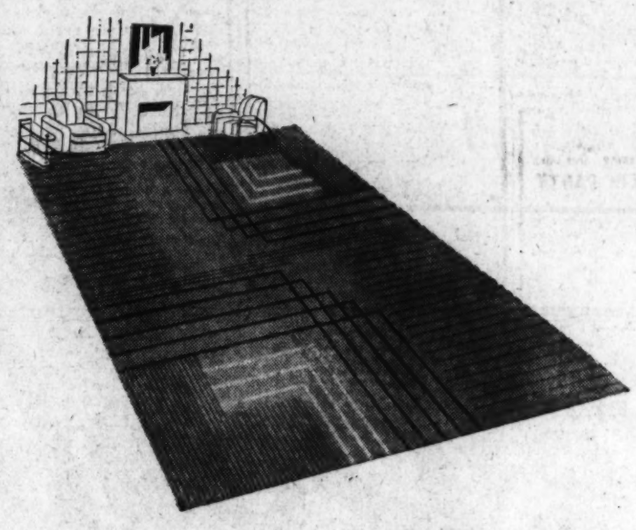
An authoritative spokesman announced the reason for the closing was "unsettled conditions caused by tribal rivalries" in the absence of a regularly-constituted government.

QUALITY ALONE IS NOT ENOUGH

THE COLOR AND STYLE MUST BE RIGHT



9x12 American Oriental Reproduction, $125.



9x12 Modern Seamless Axminster Rug, $33.50 and $43.50

TO be sure, Woodward & Lothrop carefully checks the quality of all kinds of floor coverings carried in its abundant stock. But Woodward & Lothrop does much more than that. It pays particular attention to color and style. It is careful to buy merchandise that will not be outmoded a few months or a year from the time that you buy it.

For Woodward & Lothrop knows when you buy floor coverings you are going to live with them for a long time. You will not want to economize at the expense of style.

Decorators tell us that floorcoverings are the base of any color scheme in a room . . . that a little extra money put into a well-styled rug or carpet will make all the difference between a smart and distinctive place to live and "just another room."

To make it easy for discriminating people to carry out their ideas, Woodward & Lothrop offers its customers the services of qualified decorating consultants. The salespeople, too, are constantly instructed in style trends and are basically grounded in the various decorative schemes. Woodward & Lothrop, of course, maintains an unusually large stock of smart and distinctive floorcoverings at all times.

Keep Your Eye on Hooked Rugs

Several years ago Woodward & Lothrop foresaw the revival of interest in hooked rugs . . . began seeking a first-class line of handmade rugs . . . found little to select from. There was one firm, however, that showed promise above the rest. Woodward & Lothrop went to this firm and induced it to use better materials and improve the designs. The result was the now famous Wakefield line of genuine handmade hooked rugs which were developed especially for us and are sold exclusively by us in Washington.

Hooked rugs are coming more and more into favor . . . are particularly effective if used with Early American or French Provincial decorative schemes . . . look well with most furniture. Price is no longer a barrier for you can buy a 9x12 genuine handmade Wakefield for $69.50.

Try Linoleum for Modern Effects

With modern decoration fast coming into its own, linoleum is enjoying a new vogue. Always a favorite in the kitchen, it now finds new prestige in many smart homes as floorcovering for other rooms. This store chose Armstrong linoleum because it is made of the best materials, specially cured to give a handsome appearance and rugged wearing qualities. Not too brittle so that it will crack . . . not too soft that it will show dents and buckle. And very important, it offers the largest ranges of smart styles and color combinations. The secret of the life and appearance of linoleum lies to a large extent in the skill with which it is laid. Our factory-trained men are expert in linoleum laying in any design or pattern you wish. If you want to go Modern, but not off the deep end, why not try one room first and use a linoleum floor covering as a base?

Defends Federal Spending, Assails Landon, Smith on Constitution.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 28.—Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr. (Progressive), Wisconsin, called upon all liberals tonight to unite in seeking the re-election of President Roosevelt.

Suggestions that the President had a desire to become a dictator have no foundation, he said, and as to Government spending under present Administration, "it is less than the burden imposed on our financial structure by the speculative foreign loans floated in this country with the blessings of Harding, Coolidge, Hoover and Mellon to finance a foreign boon-doggling program."

La Follette spoke over the radio in the first of a series of programs arranged under auspices of the Progressive National Committee, the Nonpartisan Labor League and the Good Neighbor League.

"Progressive-minded citizens," he said, "must close ranks to face the forces of reaction which are solidly behind Gov. Landon."

Unity among Progressives, the Senator said, is more difficult than among reactionaries because the latter have only to agree on a "do nothing" policy, while the liberals may have trouble getting together on "a policy which involves constructive advance."

"To return to power the men who were so blind to the course of economic events during the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover administrations is to court another economic disaster," La Follette asserted.

He said Mr. Roosevelt "adhered to orderly forms of constitutional government" when "Gov. Landon was talking of the need of a dictator and when Al Smith was suggesting that we shelve our Constitution for the duration of the 'war' against depression."

Gov. Landon was accused of trying to "out-Hoover Mr. Hoover" east of the Alleghanies and trying to gain Western votes by creating the impression that he will "out-Roosevelt Mr. Roosevelt."

"We as Progressives," he said, "do know President Roosevelt."

Need for Religious Education Is Cited

Opening the new academic year at Georgetown University yesterday, the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president, warned against the "danger to our country" from the educated man who has lacked spiritual training.

He addressed the 650 students of the College of Arts and Sciences at a convocation in Gaston Hall at which new members of the faculty were introduced and scholastic medals were awarded to honor men. The Rev. John E. Grattan, S. J., dean of the college, made the awards.

Scholastic prizes on the basis of the past year's achievements were awarded:

The Dixon Medal, awarded to Frank W. Miller, of Canton, Ohio.

The Dahlgren Medal for the best examination in integral and differential calculus, awarded to Blair M. Bennett, District of Columbia.

The White Medal for the best debate between the White and Gaston societies, awarded to Richard K. Martin, of Taunton, Mass.

The Horace Medal for the highest grading in the odes of Horace, awarded to Richard K. Martin, of Taunton, Mass.

Ickes' Aid, Embittered Over Use of Name in Novel, Becomes Friend of Miss Mitchell After She Explains 'No Harm Intended.'

Out of the bitterness of what he at first thought was a malicious attack, a fine friendship has sprung up between Harry Slattery, assistant to Harold Ickes, and Margaret Mitchell, author of the best seller, "Gone With the Wind."

Slattery, interviewed at the Interior Department yesterday, said that he, his mother and his brother had been incensed at Miss Mitchell's delineation of a villainous carpetbagger in her book whom she named Slattery.

M. MITCHELL.

H. SLATTERY.

Since Slattery is an uncommon name in his part of the country—around Greenville, S. C.—where his family have been rice planters for 75 years, and since Margaret Mitchell wrote her novel about that part of the South, and because Miss Mitchell's husband, John Marsh, is an employe of the Georgia Power Co., against whom Slatetry has engaged in some court battles in his capacity as a former conservation commissioner, he was certain the name Slattery had been deliberately picked for the villain as a thrust at him.

But an exchange of letters and conversation with the young Atlanta author has convinced him now, he said yesterday, that no malice was intended and the fact that the villain bears his name is pure chance.

"Miss Mitchell told me," he stated, "that she picked the name Slattery out of the New York telephone directory. She had originally named the character "Satterwhite or some such name and decided it was too hard to pronounce, and when she was reading proofs on the novel she changed it to Slattery, purely by chance."

Slattery said Miss Mitchell sent him an autographed copy of her book, and that he regards her as a "charming, amusing, vivid young woman."

He told how her tremendous success on her first book has not altered her balance. "She still cooks breakfast in her little flat in Atlanta for her husband and he keeps on working at his job, in spite of the fact they suddenly came into a fortune. Atlantans have tried to fete and exploit them—they wrote the book in collaboration over a period of seven years—but they keep their heads and decline all the invitations."

"Gone With the Wind," of which more than 200,000 copies have been purchased recently, was sold to the movies for $100,000. Royalties have added thousands of more dollars to that.

"Its success has frightened Miss Mitchell," Slattery said. "I noted recently that the book jacket carries a statement that all of the characters are fictitious, which indicates that suits for libel are anticipated."

Slattery's aged mother, in Greenville, was extremely indignant about the use of the name Slattery for a pillaging, house-burning carpetbagger. Far from being a villainous Northerner, her father was a Confederate naval officer, who was killed in battle. Linking the fact that John Marsh, co-author of the book, is an advertising man for the power company with the fact that Slattery had had some sharp encounters with a former promotion man for the same firm, the family concluded that the selection of the name was malicious.

But the Washington man has ascertained that Marsh and his erstwhile power-fight opponent are two different advertising men, although employed by the same utility company. He, therefore, has dropped plans for legal action and decided to forget all about the matter and continue his friendship with Miss Mitchell, which began in a way worthy of the imagination of the writer.

9 Planes Are Poised For S. Africa Derby

By the Associated Press.

Portsmouth, England, Sept. 28.—Nine airplanes tonight were awaiting the starter's flag for a hazardous 6,500 mile race to Johannsburg, South Africa, over an aerial steeplechase of mountains, sea and jungles.

The 12 pilots—some of the entrants are teamed—will be flagged off early tomorrow on their dash for South Africa and $50,000 prize money posted by Isadore W. Schlesinger, American-born rancher, sponsor of the derby in conjunction with the Johannesburg Exposition.

Although a time limit of 120 hours has been set for qualifiers for the prizes of $20,000, $15,000, $7,500, $5,000 and $2,500, the entrants hope to complete the flight well within 40.

Taking off at one-minute intervals, they will head across Europe to Belgrade, Yugoslavia, to Cairo, Egypt, and then almost due south for 4,000 miles to Johannesburg.

They will have to cross the Alps, span the width of the Mediterranean and fly a course down the swamp and jungle-strewn territory from Egypt to Rhodesia.

Blaze Menaces 2 More Oregon Towns; 9 Dead

Wind Holds Fate of 20,000 Residents of Coquille and North Bend.

In Bandon between 350 and 400 buildings lay in ruins, skeletons of partly collapsed walls sticking grotesquely above the mass of blackened brick, wood and steel. Through the debris, CCC enrollees and Federal and State officials picked their way, looking for bodies.

Capt. Lee Bowen, of the State police, said nine had been recovered and that six more probably lay beneath the ruins. All that was left of the town was a bakery, three mills, a lumber yard, about 20 houses and the high school.

The identified dead were Mrs. Ida Hill, Daniel Koontz, 70; Mrs. Charles McCulloch, 65; George Williams, Mrs. George Williams, Jack Bailey, killed by a falling tree; Nina Bottom, 70; J. M. Baker.

Forester Brundage said many of the fires probably were started to clean up pasture or clear hunting ground and swept into conflagrations before the rising wind.

Relief was mobilized on every hand under direction of Gov. Charles H. Martin. Maj. Gen. George S. Simonds, commander of the Ninth Corps Area, conferred with the Governor at Salem and left for the fire area. The general already had furnished trucks, supplies and national guardsmen for the stricken area.

Grants Pass and Roseburg were turned into concentration camps from which supplies were dispatched. All night long fleets of trucks traveled westward to the danger zone, carrying food, medical equipment, fire fighters and tools.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 28 (AP).—President Roosevelt tonight ordered all interested Federal agencies to render "whatever assistance possible" in the disastrous fires in Oregon. He sent the following telegram to Gov. Charles H. Martin of Oregon:

"I am much distressed at reports reaching us of the disastrous Coast fires. Please keep me fully advised. I am instructing all Federal agencies to render whatever assistance possible."

RA Aid Pledged.

By the Associated Press.

Aid in the form of Federal grants, loans and relief jobs to victims of the Oregon forest fire area was promised yesterday by the Resettlement Administration.

A statement by R. G. Tugwell, resettlement director, said the White House had instructed that agency and the Works Progress Administration to render "any possible aid."

The Tugwell statement said the Portland region resettlement office had been wired instructions to survey needs of farmers for Federal aid in the area swept by fire.

Wallace Departs On Speaking Tour

By the Associated Press.

In his shirt sleeves, laughingly parrying all questions as to whether he would participate in the campaign, Rexford G. Tugwell became acting head of the Agriculture Department yesterday, when Secretary Wallace headed West on a speaking tour.

Tugwell, Undersecretary of Agriculture and Resettlement Administrator, had just ended a six weeks' tour of the West. He said he had talked since his return with President Roosevelt, who is in Hyde Park, N. Y.

On the trip he began yesterday, Secretary Wallace is scheduled to speak on five consecutive days in the heart of the corn belt, where he has promised to discuss farm proposals by Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee.

Wallace will address a dairy meeting at Aurora, Ill, this afternoon; a four-county farm bureau session at Davenport, Iowa, tomorrow, and a gathering at Beatrice, Nebr., Thursday, and dedicate a co-operative grain elevator at Pierson, Iowa, Friday. He will speak Saturday at Decorah, Iowa.

3,000 Havana Police Start Secret Round-up

Havana, Sept. 28 (AP).—Armed with sub-machine guns, rifles and pistols, more than 3,000 police and army intelligence agents moved through Havana tonight, rounding up persons in almost every neighborhood.

They refused to divulge the reason for the action or the names of those arrested.

Tuttle Praises Civic Theater Outlook Here

Director Optimistic Over Public Response; Starts Season Oct. 21.

If the Washington Civic Theater lives up to the hopes of Day Tuttle, its director, who will be honor guest at the Women's National Press Club today, residents of the District will have an opportunity "to see first-rate acting in a first-rate legitimate play every night in the week."

Confident Washington has its full quota of discriminating drama lovers and more than its share of talented players, Tuttle said yesterday plans are shaping up nicely for the start of an inspiring theatrical season to begin October 21, when the curtain rises on George Bernard Shaw's scintillating play, "Caesar and Cleopatra," at the newly painted and re-decorated Wardman Park Theater.

It was this play, it will be remembered, that was presented during the first season of New York's Theater Guild and elicited praise from Heywood Broun to the effect, "It's the greatest play of the twentieth century."

Revealing some of the plans now under way for the Civic Theater, Tuttle pointed out: "We must educate people here to the real meaning of a theater of this type. It is not—as so many seem to think—an amateur group, planning to put on half a dozen plays a year of one or two performances each. It is not to be a commercial group. It will not depend on contributions or any sort of patronage.

Nearly Professional.

"It will be as nearly professional as it is possible to make it. We hope to give ten performances of each play and to present players who have either wide experience, or exceptional talent, or both. It is definitely not a money-making project. We expect the theater to pay for itself out of subscriptions for season tickets."

He mentioned the city-wide campaign, begun last week to enlist 1,500 season membership subscriptions, which has already been successful enough to convince him "Washingtonians haven't entirely sold their souls to motion pictures."

Tuttle regards the civic theater as both a professional and a recreational venture—professional, in its effort to present plays that would do honor to any stage; recreational in that it offers a means of relaxation and play for work-weary Government employes, who at some time or other have felt the lure of the footlights.

"Any man or woman who wants to act has a chance in an organization of this kind," he said. "And there are countless other opportunities open for persons with theatrical inclinations. We will need stage managers, stage hands, costume designers, dressmakers and ushers. We want to enlist the aid and interest of so many District residents, the theater will be a civic one in the truest sense of the word.

School Projected.

"And another thing—we're also hoping to start a school in connection with our theater," he went on. "We must have some way to train these promising young people who come to us with talent but no experience. A school seems to be the solution, and if our plans work out, we shall have one started some time soon."

Tuttle's own wide theatrical experience belies his boyish face. A graduate of the Yale Drama School, he has played with both the Theater Guild and the American Laboratory Theater in New York, is a former member of the Lobero Theater in Santa Barbara and the Pasadena Playhouse in California, and has won acclaim as an actor and playwright as well as a director.

He came to Washington from New York, where for the past five years he has directed and managed two outstanding professional stock companies—the Westchester Playhouse, at Mount Kisco, and the Ridgway Theater, at White Plains.

But now, settled with his wife, two sons and two daughters in a home in Georgetown, pushing to completion plans for the inauguration of Washington's first civic theater, Tuttle considers this work the most challenging that has come his way.

"In a city in which drama audiences are so notably discriminating, having a hand in the establishment of a civic theater is a thrilling thing," he said. "This year we will present ten performances of a play every four weeks. Next year, we hope to have a performance every night during the season."

Shirts and Shorts Advised for Gobs In Tropic Waters

Sh-h-h-h! Don't let this out.

Uncle Sam's sailors are going to doff their present uniforms and don—of all things—polo shirts and shorts.

At least, they are if recommendations of a special naval uniform board are adopted by Secretary Swanson. Headed by Capt. Randall Jacobs, the board has suggested use of the shirts and shorts by Navy men serving in tropical waters.

The new recommendations apply to sailors of the Asiatic fleet and special service squadrons. The board also proposed other changes of uniforms to meet climatic conditions elsewhere.

Labor Conciliator Jailed by Sheriff

Union, S. C., Sept. 28 (AP).—Sheriff J. G. Faucett, of Union County, said today he had put a Federal labor conciliator in jail "for trying to run my office" in a strike difficulty here.

Faucett said he did not know the name of the Federal conciliator.

"I've got one in jail," he said, but I don't know his name.

"He came into my office disorderly and trying to run it. He tried to take charge and I had to jail him."

George Kamenow, a Federal Labor Department representative, has been active in trying to settle a strike at the Monarch Mill here.

Kamenow was understood to have asked the sheriff not to send special deputies to the mill when it was proposed to reopen it this afternoon. The mill did not resume operations. The State labor department meanwhile rushed representatives here from Columbia.

Peanut Vender, Blind, Fined $5 For Park Sales

Takoma Park Man, Navy Veteran, Warned to Avoid Area.

A blind peanut vender, accused of selling his wares in a "restricted area" behind the White House, was fined $5 in Police Court yesterday while Steve asilakos, within a few feet of the Executive Mansion gates, continued his profitable nut and popcorn business unmolested.

Steve had White House recognition when he entered Police Court last week on similar charges and returned to his "private" corner without even a warning. But when Felix Desdrito, 29, blind for several years, was arraigned before Judge Isaac R. Hitt yesterday his case was quickly disposed of with a fine and reprimand.

Desdrito lives in Takoma Park, Md., and is the sole support of seven children. He told Judge Hitt he tried to sell in unrestricted areas, but found Potomac Park the only place he could make an adequate living. He was arrested by Park Policeman Arthur D. Cook and had to be led into the courtroom by a bailiff.

And now, Desdrito depends on two young nieces, Carmelita, 13, and Patricia Kruse, 12, to guide him about the streets. He clothes the two girls and sends them to school, he said.

Meanwhile, Park Police are withholding further action against Steve Vasilakos pending confirmation of the letter Mrs. Roosevelt sent Commissioner Allen requesting the now famous peanut vender not be molested. Both Mrs. Roosevelt and Allen are out of the city.

Choked Fuel Pipe Halts Flight by German Plane

Hamilton, Bermuda, Sept. 28 (AP).—The 1-ton German flying boat Zephir returned here late today, an hour after being catapulted on a flight to the Azores. The plane, its agents said, was forced back by a choked fuel pipe discovered when the Zephir was about 20 miles out. It was thought water, possibly mixed in the fuel taken aboard the plane might have been the cause of the clogging.

Plane Hits Ship; 9 Die.

Bengasi, Libya, Sept. 28 (AP).—Nine persons were killed tonight as an airplane struck the masts of a ship and crashed when taking off from the airplane base in the harbor. Besides the pilot and crew, five technicians on their way from East Africa to Italy were killed.

Shaving Mug Sales Fall; Suppliers Sad

Chicago, Sept. 28 (AP).—Sadness hung like a London fog over the sessions of the Beauty and Barber Supply Institute's thirty-third convention today.

The members said the waning virility of American men had injured business.

In all the United States last year, lamented Abraham Rappaport, jobber of shaving mugs, there were ordered only 100 fancy cups with the customer's name engraved in gilt.

Things had come to such a pass, reported Gustave A. Schiele, that he had resorted to red handles in the hope of reviving sales of straight razors—the kind tough-bearded hemen used to use.

From Mrs. Joan Gelb, though, came a ray of cheer. She said cinema actors and actresses were buying more hair dye than at any time since the platinum blond craze.

Five Italian Fliers Are Killed in Crash

Rome, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—Five military fliers were killed today when a big bomber, bound from Rome to Florence, crashed and struck a tree near Civita Castellana, 30 miles north of here.

Two pilots, an engineer, a wireless officer and a navigator were killed. One of the pilots was Dr. Guido Stellingwerst, well-known aviation writer and sports editor of Giornale di Italia. He also was editor of Voce d' Italia, the Sunday edition of Giornale di Italia. He belonged to the officers reserve corps and had been participating in two months of regular annual training. He was due to return to his editorial desk Wednesday.

Opera's Second Childhood.

The advent of 15-year-old Betty Schultz into grand opera in Chicago calls for another revision of adjectives on the part of writers covering that field of the arts. When Tetrazzini and Schumann-Heink were in their prime, press agents had little trouble coining new phrases about them. To lovers of music in diamond horseshoe days, an opera singer was simply a Voice, possessing varying degrees of volume, range and timbre. It was taken for granted that the singer had studied under some leading maestro and had made the conventional debut at La Scala.

When Mary Garden appeared on the horizon, the public discovered that opera stars could be as interesting as their roles. Radio and the movies were responsible for the next trend in operatic singers. It became important that Mme. Butterfly should have good camera angles as well as proper pitch. Mimi had to be adjusted to the microphone. It was discovered that Swarthout, Moore and Pons looked as well in bathing suits as in the plush finery of Lakme and Aida.

Now an operatic career has begun in a high school setting. The Chicago City Opera Company has signed a sophomore. At an age when most girls are sighing over Clark Gable, Betty Schultz is poring over Verdi and Wagner. Press agents will have to brush up on their thesaurus, hunting synonyms for youth and naivete. With the recent successful marriage of opera and the movies in mind, perhaps we shall still live to see Miss Schultz billed as "the Shirley Temple of the Opera."

A Bow To Democracy.

For all their professed contempt of democracy, dictators frequently manifest a sneaking respect for that system of government and all it stands for. They are like apostates who continue to crave the consolations of a religion they have repudiated.

Thus it is that while destroying the essence of democracy—protection of the individual against arbitrary rule, freedom of expression and inquiry, government by popular consent—they nevertheless cling to democracy's trappings. They indulge in rigged elections to provide ineffective assurance that they really govern with the approval of the majority. They carry on an unrelenting campaign of propaganda to persuade the masses of the virtues of a regime which they claim is whole-heartedly and enthusiastically supported by those very masses. Sometimes, as did Joseph Goebbels, propaganda minister of the Third Reich, they even go so far as to declare that their particular form of totalitarianism constitutes the only true democracy.

In his speech on Sunday, Chancellor Hitler did not make so dishonest a claim. But in contrast to his previous outpourings of wrath against democracy he almost went so far as to apologize for its absence in Germany. Some countries, he declared, can afford democracy. Were Germany richer, he suggested, she, too, might be able to afford it. But Germany is poor and hence must be regimented under a system "which alone assures her life."

It is interesting that at the opposite end of the political spectrum from fascism, a similar obeisance was recently made to the democratic ideal. Not long ago Russia issued a new constitution which at least on paper provides for the same safeguards of individual rights to be found in democratic nations. There too, apparently, dictatorship has taken cognizance of the essential sterility of the dictatorial system. But it is not alone internal compulsion which drives dictators to cloak themselves in one or more of the garments of democracy. It is also the desire to win to their support the enormous strength which democratic nations alone can wield, if they will.

The World War revealed how very potent democracies can be when they find it possible to co-operate with one another. And it may be more than a mere coincidence, therefore, that the Fuehrer's stiff little bow to democracy came at a moment when for the first time since the world conflict the democratic powers of the West are working as a unit, this time in the field of monetary policy.

What Hitler must fear is that if such cooperative action continues, democracies will close their ranks. That would be a real blow to dictatorships, which thrive on international dissension. To be sure one swallow does not make a summer. The possibility that the scope of this agreement will be widened beyond its narrow terms of reference is limited. But for the moment this action by Paris, London and Washington has dried up the wells of contempt in dictatorial lands for democratic systems. When democracies become efficient they also become dangerous to arbitrary rule of every kind.

Not A Political Issue.

Exactly a quarter of a century ago, in the autumn of 1911, the British Parliament was debating the introduction of compulsory state-operated unemployment insurance. And at that time Sidney and Beatrice Webb, famous students of the problems of social security, made the prediction that:

> Whatever scheme of insurance is adopted—especially a bad scheme—will plainly not be final. We shall have to learn from our own experience, if we are too foolish to learn by the experience of others; and we shall find, as the German government has found, that insurance schemes are always in the melting pot.

The prediction of the Webbs was amply confirmed. In the first decade of British unemployment insurance operation seven major acts altering and revising the system were passed by Parliament. While the changes have been less frequent in recent years, there is no reason to believe that the period of modification is at an end.

It would, therefore, be most unfair to assume that Gov. Landon's attack on the Administration's social security program, delivered at Milwaukee on Saturday night, was inspired by political motivation. Indeed the most significant part of his speech was the reiterated assertion that "I am a profound believer in the justice and necessity of old-age pensions," and his agreement that the Federal Government should exercise leadership, and utilize the taxing power, to make them operative. So, while Mr. Landon's criticisms are in several respects subject to counter-criticisms, the Administration will be well-advised to give serious consideration to charges directed against the method and not the purpose of its policy in this field.

The present social security act, it should be recalled, was not hastily thrown together. In contrast with much New Deal legislation, the subject was given six months' expert study before the bill was drafted. This then received extensive Congressional committee hearings and underwent a number of changes, not all desirable from a technical viewpoint. Every interest in the country had ample opportunity to make its attitude toward the legislation known, though the novelty of the undertaking of course curtailed intelligent advance consideration.

Now that the act is 13 months old its inevitable shortcomings are for the first time becoming fully apparent. And, so far as its compulsory old-age insurance feature is concerned, there is no doubt that Mr. Landon concentrated on the two main defects. A pay roll tax which mounts to 6 per cent, equally divided between employers and employes, is exceedingly drastic and will undoubtedly serve to create more unemployment unless it is modified. And no convincing arguments have as yet been advanced to justify the tremendous reserve fund which the Treasury, in opposition to many students of social insurance, has throughout demanded.

On these points, to which he devoted the bulk of his Milwaukee speech, Gov. Landon's criticisms are well-taken. But his strictures against the unemployment insurance section of the act call for elaboration and clarification.

It would appear, from the nature of the Republican nominee's comments, that he is unsympathetic to the idea of Federal encouragement to State unemployment insurance systems. Certainly there is nothing whatsoever in the present act which prevents the several States from adopting systems as divergent as their local industrial problems. In the words of former Gov. Winant of New Hampshire, chairman of the Social Security Board, the act merely "standardizes the minimum burden which all industry must bear to finance a system of unemployment compensation." It does not, as Gov. Landon asserts, "completely ignore" the value of divergent State action "as experimental workshops in which new methods and policies may be tried out and gradually perfected."

Possibly Gov. Landon is opposed to the whole conception of unemployment insurance as a proper function for the State to undertake. There would be no need to apologize for such a viewpoint, assuming that one defends the alternative of a well-regulated dole system, with payments made through public employment exchanges as a check against malingering. But the general trend in all industrial nations is toward insurance and against the dole. This the Republican platform recognizes by proposing "to encourage adoption by the States of honest and practical measures for meeting the problems of unemployment insurance." It is yet to be shown that the present law fails to further exactly that objective.

The United States, by common consent, has embarked on a national social security program. In the first steps taken toward that end there is much that can be improved upon. Constructive criticism aimed to secure improvement is in no sense partisan. On the other hand, irrelevant or unsubstantiated charges against the social security program should be most carefully avoided during the campaign period. Whoever is in office it will prove true that "insurance schemes are always in the melting pot." They will change anyway. But if they are made a partisan issue they will probably change for the worse.

The Fall Of Toledo.

With the fall of Toledo the last barrier to the advance on Madrid of the southern rebel army, under Gen. Francisco Franco, has been removed.

With this development the plight of the Caballero government becomes extremely serious. Only a short distance northwest of Toledo is the railroad which is the capital's sole outlet to the loyalist regions along the Mediterranean coast.

From the viewpoint of morale as well as for material reasons the fall of Madrid would be an extremely severe blow to loyalist hopes. It would mean that the whole nation, with the exception of Catalonia and a strip of land along the Bay of Biscay would be in rebel hands. Moreover, once in possession of the capital the rebels could claim that they now constitute the real government. And the claim might easily provide Germany, Italy and Portugal with the pretext they need to recognize the rebels as belligerents or even as the regularly constituted rulers of Spain.

While the insurgent army in the Guadarramas has been immobilized for weeks, Gen. Franco's forces have made rapid progress. And they have done so because, once Badajoz was captured, it became possible for them to get a constant supply of arms and ammunition through Portugal, whose sympathies for the rebel cause has never been disguised. It is no secret that Portugal has served as the sluiceway for supplies from foreign sources intended for the rebels.

Will the war be over once Madrid has fallen? It does not appear likely. Even today, behind the rebel lines, guerrilla warfare is being waged by bands hostile to the Fascists. Certainly Catalonia will not meekly submit to the yoke which the rebel leaders would put around its neck. And while no match for the rest of Spain, Catalonia has within its borders much of the industrial wealth of the nation and a population which can be expected to rally behind the banners of the Barcelona government.

The prospect, therefore, is that the war will go on for some while longer. The odds at the moment have certainly turned in favor of the rebels. But even should the latter prove victorious, as now seems possible, the fires stirred up in Spain will continue to smoulder and blaze long after open fighting has ceased. For the conditions that gave birth to the Popular Front will not be removed by the fiat of a dictator or the pronunciamentoes of generals.

The Indivisible Dichotomized.

Two visiting artists—Mr. Lawrence, from England, and M. Roy, from France—have expressed the opinion that art ceases to be art when it is used as a medium for propaganda. They were speaking primarily of painting. Because the devotees of a sister art, writing, are split on the same question, the visitors' sentiment is especially interesting.

In literature, the left-wingers pound loudly for the proletarian novel. Absurd, reply their conservative fellows, for whether proletarian or monarchical a novel's a novel for a' that. Nonsense, comes back the answer, a novel that lacks the realism to include consideration of the basic problems of living is no novel at all—merely a thin romance, if that.

Then the conservatives pounce on the word "romance." Romance, they cry, is the essence of art. Sociological moralizing is quite alien to art; how else explain the virtue of, say, "Moby Dick?" The innocent bystander, meantime, concludes that both are right and both are wrong. Each talks only in extremes. What is wanted is a sense of balance: Romance and realism are not so much antagonistic as indisseverable parts of a single whole.

Realist Henry James has sworn that "art is nothing more than the shadow of humanity." Romanticist George Jean Nathan has answered that "art is a reaching out into the ugliness of the world for vagrant beauty and the imprisoning of it in a tangible dream." Both are right, so long as we stipulate that neither life nor art can be captured in a definition.

In economizing, as in other things, one should use a little judgment. The Wall Street Journal tells of a Scotchman who took such long steps to save a $2 pair of shoes he split an $8 pair of pants.

Another thing that encourages transatlantic flights is the fact the flier knows that no matter where he comes down he will land on page 1.

A Labor Shortage.

From Steel.

Midyear 1936 has brought unmistakable signs of an impending skilled labor shortage in many branches of the iron and steel and metal working industries—and also indications of a scarcity of workmen's homes.

Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, and other steel companies are expanding the scope of their apprentice training; in regard to the housing shortage, more inquiries have been received recently by manufacturers of low-cost steel buildings suitable for workers' homes than in many years, and from a diversity of industries.

The Carnegie-Illinois plan is being set up on a broad scale to include four major training programs. Because in recent years this type of activity has been retarded by the depression, and because its importance cannot be minimized now, the company's present plans call for renewed efforts, directed primarily at apprentice training for the immediate present. The other three divisions of employe training are to be divided into attention for the college graduate, preparing individuals for the supervisory field, and in educating for specialized training.

The "Hate" Charge.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With a brusquerie such hardy dynamiters as Farley and Ickes might admire, Mr. Wellington Smith berates those New Deal agnostics who have started a "hate-Roosevelt" campaign, to the detriment of good taste and Christian charity.

For long months like complaints have been heard from the grunt and groan section of the Administration, which states that it—and only it—has succored, not alone America, but the world, from a fate worse than taxpaying. Nor has it failed to corral a group of folks, who, with the aid of a cloudburst of Government checks, concur in the idea.

Mr. Smith should remember that intemperance of the critical faculty is a natural result of intemperance in government. When a New Deal spellbinder, unable to cloak his exasperation at opposition, lambasts his critics and the business world in the pungent blasting phrases in which he delights, that, my friends, is not hate. It is brotherly love (Philadelphia patent expired) New Deal model. Would the New Deal basely claim a monopoly of this commodity, in violation of the Sherman law? J. WINSTEAD.
Washington, Sept. 25.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The joke of it is that for a real "hate" demonstration you have to observe a Dealer the moment he is crossed or criticised, no matter how trivial the issue. Or hear a Roosevelt or a Farley declaim with undisguised contempt against "brigands of big business," "princes of privilege," "the predatory few," and other phrases of loving affection and freedom from "hate," too numerous to record.

It's no mark of "hate" to hold the opinion that, in kicking Hooverism down the back stairs, the New Dealers have substituted an arrangement twice as bad. I imagine this document (from a '32 Roosevelt voter) will be taken as an excellent sample of what is charged. But despite violent objection to most of the New Deal policies there really isn't an ounce of "hate" in a carload. E. C. BARR.
Washington, Sept. 25.

Conflicting Straw Votes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to the poll of the Literary Digest, Gov. Landon seems likely to win the November election by an overwhelming majority. For the last three elections the Digest poll has predicted the outcome with uncanny accuracy. The present poll, however, reaching only automobile and telephone owners, is likely to disfranchise a great number of Roosevelt supporters, who fall largely in the smaller income bracket, who are not able to own either an automobile or a telephone.

The poll conducted by the Institute of Public Opinion tells a different story. This poll, though not so numerous as that of the Literary Digest, not only covers the different groups and classes of voters, but actually sees to it that a proportionate number of returns is received from each element. The poll gives Roosevelt the advantage both in the number of popular and electoral votes. An analysis by groups makes Roosevelt the sure winner. Sixty per cent of the women vote, 54 per cent of the farm vote, 74 per cent of the labor vote, 80 per cent of those on relief and 61 per cent of the first voters are assigned to the Roosevelt colors. If this indication be correct, there can be no doubt of a Roosevelt victory in November.

In addition to these groups, there is another favorable to Roosevelt not included in either poll. The Negro vote will in all probability be at least 60 per cent for Roosevelt. This poll by groups, which seems more reliable than any other method, clearly indicates the election of Roosevelt, the Literary Digest to the contrary notwithstanding. KELLY MILLER.

Old-Age Pension Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have a few thoughts about the administration of the old-age pension:

Would it not be better to have a national old-age pension paid from the national Treasury and let the States, as they accept its provisions, send their moneys to the United States Treasury, so that these old worn-out people can spend their few remaining days where they wish, and often live much cheaper than where now located? Where expenses are high, as in the District, who can live on $30 per month here? Also, waive all restrictions except that they shall not actively hire for work as few could do. Utah, Idaho and some other States have no such restrictions on State pensions, but encourage the aged to help out. J. W. M.
Washington, Sept. 24.

On Pigs in Pokes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In Gov. Landon's first campaign address he warned the voters about "voting for a pig in a poke." This quotation is from the Governor's references to the uncertainty as to what the New Deal would do during the next four years.

Your correspondent in reporting Gov. Landon's speech made in Milwaukee on Saturday night, September 26, stated in part: "The Republican nominee admitted he was not clear on how the money should be raised to pay his proposed pension"—meaning a pension for old people. Again your correspondent, in referring to Mr. Landon's statement that the present old-age pension law should be repealed, states: "... but (referring to Mr. Landon) gave no indication of the size of the pensions he would pay ..."

Mr. Landon proposes a new farm program, but is rather indefinite as to how it shall be managed and what benefits the farmers may derive from it. Mr. Landon is also against the present reciprocal tariff policies, but does not give the voters a clear picture of what he would propose and how such proposals would work out.

I am of the opinion that Mr. Landon's admonishment to voters not to "buy a pig in a poke" will be heeded on election day, and to Mr. Landon's detriment. C. B. R.
Washington, Sept. 27.

Remonetize Silver?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let the Unted States remonetize silver which can be accomplished by the stroke of the President's pen, authority for which is given him under the Wheeler amendment to the farm relief act, at nature's ratio of 16 to 1, thereby standardizing the silver of foreign countries at the statutory price of $1.29 an ounce, the export trade of the United States will jump by leaps and bounds putting millions of men back to constructive work with wages and purchasing power. This will end all talk of war and will forever end so-called cyclical depressions which are brought about by a privately owned banking and currency system, so-called Federal, which has the power to inflate and deflate credit currency and fix the rates of interest. WILLIAM J. DWYER.
Washington, Sept. 24.

The Legion's Resolutions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Westbrook Pegler's column in The Post of September 26 was a gem. Mr. Pegler is probably aware, however, that these resolution makers and office seekers of the American Legion do not speak for the rank and file of the Legion members. I am a veteran and a patriot, but not the "A. L." or "D. A. R." type. It is obvious that the legion is doing its best to repay a debt to a certain publisher for the support furnished during the fight for the bonus.

The alignment of this veterans organization with a Fascist publisher, demagogic priest and the 90 per cent reactionary "free?" press is a bid for the role of "shock" troops when the objective of the advocates of the new "Americanism" is obtained. A. L. FEATHERSTONE.
Washington, Sept. 26.

Correction.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please correct the mistake which was made in the letters column in your issue of September 27, where my name is signed to a brief communication on "The A. F. G. Convention." I did not write that nor anything whatever on that subject. I took no part in that convention and have no opinions pro or con on it. Give the man credit for his statement and let him bear the responsibility. J. O. KNOTT.
Washington, Sept. 27.
(The letter in question should properly have been credited to J. D. Knott. The Post regrets the error and gladly publishes this correction.—Editor.)

A School Teacher Discusses Crime.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am a teacher in the District of Columbia. I have taught hundreds of warm-blooded little Negro children and I want to tell the readers of your paper that the Negro race is producing a greater percentage of respectable citizens than any other race, if you consider its income.

I am saying this in spite of the fact that whenever a Negro youth commits a crime, it is generally published in Southern papers on the very front page. Unless he achieves an honor that attracts the world, as did Jessie Owens, he rarely gets into the paper at all.

This policy gives Washingtonians the idea that Negroes, especially young Negro boys, are not to be trusted. Permit me to say that when I read in your issue of September 25 that a young colored janitor had confessed to the slaying of a white woman I was truly sorry for Mrs. Goodwin's family and chagrined over another murder by one of my own race. Whenever anything like this happens all of the educated women of Negro blood say, "Would that this could have been prevented!"

How can such things be prevented? They can be in just one way—through education and higher wages; certainly not through relief.

Some of the little children whom I teach eat, sleep and live five and six in a room, including parents. How can the ideals of the Negro child be the same as those of any other child, when one is loved at home by his mother and servants, while the other is left by his mother at 6 a. m. and he brings himself up in the gutter?

Many uneducated Negro women are coming North by the thousands, so that their children may have a better chance for an education. The schools here are doing the best job possible, the Negro teachers are untiring and despite the fact that we are asked, "Educating Negroes for what?" we keep marching on.

I know, but for the grace of God, others might have been born without a fair chance, and they, too, might have become murderers. I do not know this Robinson at all, but each time a Negro is tried by the State, I wonder if the State tried to give him a fair chance in his childhood.

MRS. MARY D. EVANS.
Washington, Sept. 27.

Blum's Calm

Laura Puffer Morgan, European representative of the National Council for Prevention of War, makes the following report from abroad under date of September 9:

IN THE midst of the worst political crisis that Europe has faced since the Armistice, the statesman who seems to be emerging as a leader is Leon Blum, intellectual, Socialist Premier of France. It was M. Blum who, when it became evident to everyone that the insurgent forces in Spain were being supported, financed and equipped with arms and ammunition by the Fascist powers, proposed a pact of nonintervention and an embargo on arms and ammunition to both sides in the civil war, as the only method to maintain peace in Europe, regardless of the natural sympathy of the French government for the liberal government in Spain and the legal arguments that could be made in behalf of the support of a duly elected government. In spite of reluctance on the Fascist side and numerous reservations, doubtless proposed to cause delay, the convention has finally been signed by the chief powers concerned, thanks to the firm attitude of the French government, supported by the British.

Again, when there was evidence that in spite of the nonintervention pact and the embargoes imposed by certain individual governments, aid continued to be sent to the insurgents, M. Blum again took the initiative in proposing an international committee of supervision and control to guard against the violation of the nonintervention agreement. Today, as these words are written, this committee of control is convening in London with representatives of a score or more countries present.

• • • •

Great praise has been given to M. Blum in the English press for adamantly resisting the increasing pressure from the extreme left wing in France, which is clamoring for a more active policy on behalf of the Spanish government in the civil war—if not intervention at least to have lifted the embargo on arms and ammunition.

• • • •

But the pressure from the Left is so strong that the immediate setting up of the International Nonintervention Committee has become urgent for this reason as well as to stop the supply of arms which are still reaching the insurgents.

The delay in the meeting of the International Control Committee, which will supervise the measures of nonintervention, has been due mainly to the hesitation of the German and Portuguese governments. They had accepted "in principle," but they wanted all the details of the committee's powers to be worked out in advance. The British and French, on the other hand, argued that this would involve an unnecessary waste of time, since the committee itself could best decide on their duties and on the necessary measures to be taken. When Germany finally accepted, the British government decided to wait no longer for the Portuguese acceptance, but to convene the meeting on the theory that Portugal will find it impossible not to take part in the proceedings once they are started. There is a suggestion that if any country refuses to co-operate in withholding military supplies to the belligerents, it may itself be subjected to the embargo. The chairman of this committee is Mr. W. S. Morrison, financial secretary to the Treasury, thus emphasizing the technical rather than the political character of the committee.

Another initiative taken by the French premier is that for a new effort for the limitations and reduction in armaments. M. Blum has always favored the policy of reconciliation with Germany, and his first speech on foreign affairs after he became premier was more conciliatory than any speech from a French premier in recent years. This policy was given further expression in Geneva in June when, in speaking of possible steps to make the League system more effective, he declared the necessity of a speedy agreement to stop the race in armaments. He believes that Hitler's recent utterances give promise of the possibility of reaching such an agreement. It is announced that M. Blum himself and several members of the cabinet are already working on a plan for the limitation and progressive reduction of armaments.

Such a step is seen to be all the more necessary by the decision of the French cabinet to increase its armaments in order to meet the challenge made by Germany's extending the period of conscript service in the army to two years. In an official note issued after the cabinet meeting, M. Blum emphasized the grave danger constituted by the armaments race and announced that the French government intended to take the necessary initiative at the forthcoming international conferences with a view to a further conference for the limitation and reduction of armaments. It might be pointed out here that the Disarmament Conference over which Mr. Henderson presided is still technically in existence and that it can be called together at any time when conditions seem favorable.

Britain And Her King.

There is no immediate indication that His Majesty King Edward VIII intends to settle down and become an example of discreet, middle-class English respectability. His Majesty likes the company of the ladies; his social habits, like those of his grandfather, are nocturnal, and he has discovered a congenial companion in Kemal Ataturk.

The new Kemal, according to British moral standards, is even more offensive than King Carol of Roumania, who was stricken from the guest list of the late King George for ungentlemanly conduct. Nevertheless, King Edward VIII has invited him to Buckingham Palace.

* * * *

The British censors will endeavor to suppress published news and comment on the social attachments of the new King, apparently in a waning hope that he will presently adjust his mode of life to his responsibility and the cherished English tradition of respectability. But England is a free country within certain generous limitations, which are fixed by public opinion rather than by law, and in time the people will decide that inasmuch as he has been asking for it he ought to get it.

Having given him every chance to pull himself together after his long years of boyish frivolity as understudy to his father they will exercise their right to criticize and demand a higher standard from the man who draws a big salary for setting a national example. For, after all, the principal duty of the English King is to demonstrate by his private life the homely virtues of sobriety and domesticity which are held to be the dearest elements of the British character.

The new King's grandfather was one who gathered him daisies by the way, and he not only preserved his respectability but actually endeared himself to his subjects because he demonstrated that a gentleman could play at mischief on his own time without neglecting his formal role of gentleman.

The British devotion to the King is a semireligious feeling, and for 25 years under King George they could look to their ruler with admiration in the belief that he personified the qualities to which the British character aspire. They indorsed his low regard for Carol of Rumania, which bespoke the decency of the English nation, and approved his profane remarks about Carol because they expressed the vigorous manliness of the perfect Briton when his moral sense was affronted.

* * * *

The British will not turn easily to the example of a King whose personal conduct revokes all the qualities which they loved to see in the ideal English gentleman and provides instead a code which if generally adopted would make them a dissolute race. They will be patient, of course, but the conduct of their new King suggests that he doesn't care to play the game, and current murmurs of gossip will grow into a national scandal, which presently will defy the censors not for the mere pleasure of repeating spicy hearsay but for the serious purpose of calling a public servant to account for a grave neglect of duty.

More in sorrow than in anger but not without some resentment they will make known to a King who is still a hehoyden, though rising 40 years, that the contract calls for certain virtuous forms and remind him that loose conduct on the part of the King is not only a serious disservice to the people who look to the Crown for their example but a dangerous rap against British prestige abroad, especially among the inferior subject races, at a time when the empire can use all the prestige it can muster.

In this country we don't expect much of the scions and scionesses of the overprivileged. They are always marrying and divorcing under a casual, chickenyard code of morality, getting drunk in the night clubs and seeking their social and intellectual level, and never quite plumbing it, in the haunts of the underworld. But they have no moral responsibility to the country except to provide the extreme example of indecent behavior, in which it cannot be said that they have ever been remiss. The British will resent the effort to introduce this American custom into their national and spiritual life.

17. Could you be interested in our Old Oaken Bucket policy? (Double indemnity if you get the bucket up in 20 years.)
18. Do you carry collision insurance on your plows?
19. How much contentment insurance do you carry on your cows?
20. Have you any policy covering accidents to your pigs or do you think the Democrats are through experimenting with pork?

21. State whether you are insuring your crops for the full year or whether you may sell the place any time for a golf course or trailer camp.
22. Do you keep chickens and if so how about some fresh country egg insurance?
23. Do you carry any insurance protecting your scarecrows from disability? (Double the principal sum if the crow scares the scarecrow.)
24. Are you insured against visits from insurance men?
25. If not, why not?

"I'm going milking, sir," she said;
"Who is that fellow by your side?"

Helsingfors.

WHEN FINLAND paid the first installment of her debt to America, Americans in general were somewhat dazed. To many of them Finland was merely a name of a country lying somewhere up around Greenland—or was it Iceland or Spitzbergen, or some other Arctic section?—covered with ice most of the time, and inhabited by woodchoppers, long-distance runners and javelin throwers. And it believed in paying debts—a thing which really wasn't done, you know, judging by the attitude of other countries in the Old World. Most perplexing.

Later, when it was discovered that the first payment was an earnest of things to follow, American tourists began heading for Finland, and there were more of them this summer than ever before. If they kept their eyes open and asked as many questions as tourists should, they must have learned many things that astonished them and upset all their preconceived ideas of a country, which, so far from being small, is the sixth largest country in Europe, only Russia, France, Germany, Spain and Sweden being larger.

Another astonishing thing—although it is really unkind to mention it—Finland's income regularly exceeds her expenditures. It does not seem normal, but treasury statistics affirm it. Yet Finland is a poor country. The outward contrast between Stockholm and Helsingfors is striking. The Stockholmers are all well dressed, there is a somewhat surprising number of autos, and nearly all of these are of very recent date. The Helsingfors crowds are not well dressed, there are comparatively few autos except the taxis, and many of them are of ancient vintage as America reckons autos. With more than half of Sweden's population, Finland has only some 33,000 autos against Sweden's 200,000.

All this is probably not unconnected with the fact that Finland is paying her debts. It seems also more than likely that the people's obvious sense of real values lies back of the fact that the government is spending less than its income. This could probably be done also in America if it were not generally felt there that we must keep up with the Joneses.

Foreigners Investing In Finnish State Bonds.

"THE ECONOMIC situation is satisfactory," said a governmental official whom I asked about it. One of the best evidences of this, in addition to the facts cited above, is that foreigners are beginning to invest in Finnish state bonds and other securities. The public debt of some $70,000,000 was reduced by nearly $5,000,000 in 1935. The state railways made a profit of $3,000,000, the posts and telegraphs added over $700,000, canals nearly $70,000 and the state forests nearly $2,600,000. In all, state-owned undertakings showed a profit of almost $7,300,000. Total expenditures for the year were about $100,660,000. In other words, about $7 of every $100 came from state undertakings or state-owned property. Unemployment figures are negligible.

Finland is a republic, dedicated to democracy—with one qualification. The Communist Party is banned, and not permitted to present candidates for the Riksdag, the unicameral parliament which meets, by the way in one of the most beautiful buildings I have ever seen. Of the 200 deputies in the Riksdag, the Social-Democrats, who, like their Swedish colleagues, merely think they are Socialists, have 78, or 39 per cent. Next strongest is the Agrarian party, with 53 seats. The Swedish party has 21, the Unionists 18 and the Patriotic National Movement Party 14.

The last named party represents the Fascist element in Finland, but stands nevertheless for parliamentary government. It stands close to the Unionists and the two are one party for practical purposes. The Progressives have 11 delegates, Peasants 3 and the People's Party 2. It is noteworthy that at the last election on July 1 and 2, this country of about 3,600,000 inhabitants cast 1,174,000 votes. Evidently the Finnish women, who were the first in the worlld to receive the franchise, use it.

Despite all denials, there is some friction between the Finnish Finns and the Swedish Finns. After seven centuries of Swedish rule, during which the Finns enjoyed equal rights with the Swedes, racial distinctions hardly exist. Only the two languages, both official and enjoying equal standing, still persist, and Swedish, spoken as a mother-tongue by only 10 per cent of the whole population, is slowly losing ground. But of actual, serious antagonism there appears to be none, and Finland's associations with Sweden—and also with Norway—are undoubtedly closer than ever before.

THERE IS, as mentioned before, a Finnish Party which stands, with qualifications, for Fascist ideals, but there is no menace of fascism or Hitlerism here. There is also no Communist menace; an organized volunteer militia of 120,000 men, largely made up of sharpshooters, is guaranty for that. And Finland remembers the terrible days of the Red invasion in 1918.

Finland enjoyed a wide measure of autonomy under Russia from 1809, when the country was lost to Sweden, until the last few years before the war, when a series of oppressions began, with assaults on that autonomy. The World War liberated the country, which proclaimed its independence in 1917—and is determined to protect it. There seems to be no fear that Russia will undertake any action against the country.

There seems here also, as in Sweden—a fact which astounds me, who know Hitler and his followers—to be a general feeling that there will be no war in Europe. But if war comes all the Scandinavian countries will stand together to preserve their neutrality. That much is certain. And there is every prospect that they will be able to preserve it, for no country will lightly undertake to join battle as a side issue with these sturdy Scandinavians. The price would be too high to compensate for any possible gains. The Finns, like the Swedes and Norwegians, are determined to have peace even if they have to fight to get it.

There is enough national feeling and pride of race in Finland to equip a much larger country. I have spoken of the fact that Finland is paying her debts to America. It is advisable not to mention this to the Finns. They regard any reference to it as an insult—as carrying the intimation that Finns could do anything but pay their debts. I encountered this feeling every time I mentioned debts, and fellow travelers have had the same experience.

Finns Resent Talk Of Russian Influence.

ANOTHER touchy point is the century of Russian domination. Any reference to accomplishments in that period brings the sharp rejoinder that it was Finns, not Russians, who built the "Big Church," or any other of the imposing buildings one finds in this beautiful and so advantageously located city.

But traces of the Russian era persist none the less, although a folder in the English language, prepared for tourists, asserts that the Russians left no impress on Finland. As soon as a foreigner enters a hotel he has to hand his passport to the portier, precisely as in the Russia of the czars. He does not get it back until he has paid his hotel bill—a fact which will doubtless not be without its good points, in the eyes of American hotel men—and he must pay a small fee for the privilege of letting the police stamp it. If he leaves by ship he finds a policeman on board who also demands his passport and stamps it. But this costs nothing.

(Note for disciples of Gambrinus: The Finnish beer is quite as bad as the Swedish, from which no descent is thinkable.)

American cigarettes are too expensive abroad for the average tourist, but a Finnish concern offers a cigarette called "Twenty Gold" in an American style package with an inscription in English declaring it to be "a toasted blend of the finest aromatic Turkish and the choicest of American leaf tobaccos." As far as my judgment goes, one can get a lift with them. They cost about 11 cents for a package of 20.

English is spoken at all hotels and in all better shops, which is all to the good, for it would probably be impossible for any foreigner to learn Finnish in the course of a normal life of threescore and ten. Two samples by way of conclusion:

All very true, no doubt, but hardly the thing to spring on a man speaking an uninflected language.

Little Eva

By Barnet Nover

Mr. Morgenthau To The Rescue.

In old-fashioned melodrama the coy and beautiful heroine was never saved except in the nick of time. To create the proper degree of suspense, the author saw to it that the wily villain almost, but not quite, got away with his deep-dyed plot. The formula was simplicity itself: No villain, no last-minute rescue; no last-minute rescue, no excitement; no excitement, no audience; no audience and it doesn't matter at all whether the heroine is saved or not. It follows that the villain is really more important for success than either heroine or hero.

From the point of view of dramatic force, therefore, it was a stroke of luck Saturday when at the very moment that Washington and London were coming to the rescue of Mlle. Eva (the franc), Russia suddenly intruded itself on the scene. Moscow may have been quite unaware of the role it was about to play in the unfolding drama. But you can't fool the audience. They know a Simon Legree when they see one, even when his shirt is not tucked in.

At this point the plot gets a little bit mixed up. Apparently the Muscovite villain was not out to get the mademoiselle but to stick a golden knife into honest but plodding John Bull (a minor character). But the effect was the same. Acting with the elan of Benjamin Disraeli in the affair of the Suez Canal shares, Secretary Morgenthau leaped into the breach. He seized the knife out of the hands of the Muscovite, foiled the villain and completed the rescue. The play ended amid the mingled strains of The Star-Spangled Banner, the Marseillaise and God Save the King, the applause of the audience and off-stage noises sounding like the Internationale played off key.

It was a happy ending. But does it make sense? Possibly it makes little difference whether it does or not, except to Russia which desperately does not want to play the part of international villain. But the more curious will wonder.

What are the circumstances? Last week following negotiations between Paris, London and Washington, the hard-pressed French government faced by inevitable devaluation of the franc, decided to cut the Gordian knot at this time. In doing so it had the assurance of the British and American governments that if the franc were devaluated by between a quarter and a third they would throw behind the new franc-pound-dollar ratio the great weight of their equalization funds.

The wisdom of this action by the British and American treasury authorities is not to be questioned. The alternatives were extremely unpleasant. On the one hand there was the possibility that with France forced off gold a new period of international monetary chaos would result. On the other hand if France decided to keep the franc at its gold par while taking action to curb the outward flow of gold, which in two years had already involved a loss of $1,800,000,000 of the yellow metal, it would mean the imposition of the kind of drastic restrictions on foreign trade and exchange that Germany and Italy have been forced to take.

In either case international trade, which has been slowly reviving, would have had a severe setback. An international agreement for de facto stabilization of British, American and French currencies, with the franc brought into line with the devaluated dollar and the depreciated pound, must therefore be regarded as a statesmanlike act.

From the French point of view, moreover, the political consequences of devaluation, which practically all parties in France (not least vociferously the Communists) have opposed, were likely to prove less serious if French action were fitted into the framework of an international understanding. That this is the case can be seen in the fact that the Right organs, in order to make political capital of the abandonment of the gold standard, are insisting that the Franco-British-American gentleman's agreement is really no agreement at all.

In view of this circumstance Mr. Morgenthau's dramatic action in throwing dollars into the breach to rescue the pound sterling from alleged Muscovite attack had its pragmatic value since it made clear that the United States, for its part, would stand by the agreement. Yet the Russians are entirely justified in complaining that they have, without any cause whatever, been accused of doing what it was never their purpose of doing since it was distinctly out of line with their interests. They have explained the offer to sell 1,000,000 pounds sterling "at any price" as simply an ordinary bank transaction to make possible the payment of $6,000,000 owed a Swedish firm. Certainly the sum involved was not great and constituted no threat to the pound which could not have been met by the British equalization fund of close to $2,000,000,000. And since Russian trade with Great Britain is, on balance, distinctly in favor of the Soviet Union any reduction in the exchange value of British exchange means, in effect, a reduction in Russian receipts from London.

There are some, of course, who when it comes to Russia think exclusively in terms of the Red menace. They insist that Russia does not want any agreement to come into effect that might help bring on world stabilization since that would indefinitely postpone the day of world revolution. It is simple for such folk to accept the thesis of a Red plot against the Anglo-French-American agreement even though to believe it is to believe that Russian leaders are stupid enough to think they can stop a tank with a pea shooter.

But the trouble with that thesis is that it is years behind the times. Thinking as it does more and more in terms of its national interest and less and less in terms of world revolution there is nothing Russia wants more than economic stabilization and peace. To prove the point Litvinoff, Zinovieff and their alleged co-plotters were executed in the hope that their fervent confessions of guilt would smear Trotzky, who still clings to the thesis of world revolution. It was a curiously savage way of proving Russia's will to peace. But it was intended to do just that.

"Nanga Parbat Adventure"

By William Lyon Phelps

The Himalayas.

We hear constantly of the repeated attempts to climb Mount Everest, the highest peak on the earth, the top of the world; but here is a new book on another part of the Himalayas, which is one of the most thrilling descriptions of of mountain climbing I have ever seen, and certainly has the most astounding photographs.

* * * *

This square, thinnish volume is called "Nanga Parbat Adventure," and is translated from the German of Fritz Bechtold by the Englishman H. E. G. Tyndale. It contains 80 amazing photographs, many of them taken at great heights and almost insuperable difficulties. The book is published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

No one can read this book without increased admiration for the human spirit. The courage, endurance, indomitable perseverance of these splendid men have helped to raise the level of human nature.

They did not succeed in reaching the summit of the mountain; ten members of the expedition died in the attempt to do so, including the leader, Wily Merkl. The book is dedicated to these ten brave fellows, four white explorers, and six gallant native darkskinned Himalayan porters, "who now lie on Nanga Parbat."

Nanga Parbat is a mountain in the western Himalayas, 26,842 feet. The first attempt to climb it was in 1895, by a British expedition, led by A. F. Mummery. They were probably destroyed by an avalanche.

In 1932 a German-American expedition under the leadership of Willy Merkl, made the second attempt. They got to a height of 23,000 feet, and had to return.

Willy Merkl in Munich organized in 1934 the expedition described in this book. It is heartening to read, after the failure of this expedition, and loss of ten of its members, that a new expedition is now being planned in Munich, which will leave Europe next April.

New Political Party

Farmer-Labor-Progressive Federation In Wisconsin May Contain Seeds For New National Organization Of Leftists.

By Felix Bruner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Milwaukee.

THAT NEW political party, which many believe will grow out of the present upheaval and which should result in a sharper demarcation than now exists between conservative and radical thought, may already have been born here in Wisconsin, a State famous for political and social innovations.

The new organization is known as the Farmer-Labor-Progressive Federation. One becomes aware of is existence immediately upon entering Wisconsin. It has billboards everywhere urging the voters to cast their ballots for its candidates. Strictly speaking, the federation is not now a political party, in that it has no place on the ballot. Its indorsed candidates, with the exception of Presidential candidates, are on the Progressive ticket, but some of these candidates are not Progressives in the Wisconsin sense. They are Socialists.

The federation unites the Socialist and the Progressive groups in Wisconsin. It has an understanding with Labor's Nonpartisan League. It shows signs of spreading about the country. It may be the means for amalgamating the various so-called progressive and discontented elements into the new political alignment that to many seems inevitable before 1940.

Socialists Abandon Labels To Join Movement.

UNDER the banner of the new federation, Wisconsin Socialists, including Daniel W. Hoan, who has been mayor of Milwaukee for 20 years, have abandoned their party identity, so far as the State is concerned. They are now merely federationists. Thousands of Progressives also have become members of the federation, but these do not include Senator Robert M. La Follette and Gov. Philip F. La Follette. They prefer, at least for the time being, to be known merely as Progressives. Nevertheless, Gov. La Follette has the indorsement of the group in his candidacy for a third term.

This new alignment is not expected to have a great effect upon the forthcoming Presidential election, but it may be a considerable factor in future national campaigns, at least, many people here think so. The situation in Wisconsin, so far as the national campaign is concerned is somewhat similar to that in Minnesota. President Roosevelt in 1932 carried each State by about 300,000 votes. Each State has a total of about 1,000,000 voters who go to the polls. There is this difference, however: While in Minnesota the Farmer-Labor organization is torn by internal strife, the Progressives here present a united front and have gathered the Socialists into their fold.

As in Minnesota, much depends upon the vote for William Lemke, running in this State as an independent. It is agreed that he will poll a large vote, but perhaps not the 100,000 that is being predicted by some observers in Minnesota. Most of this vote will be taken from the Roosevelt column. How much of the remaining vote can be swung from Roosevelt to Landon is problematical. While impartial observers are inclined to agree that Landon has a chance in Minnesota, there are few to be found here who will concede him that chance. The principal reason is the fact that the La Follettes are giving President Roosevelt their support.

Incidentally, these independent estimates agree fairly closely with the Gallup poll. The latest figures in that poll give President Roosevelt 49 per cent of the vote in Minnesota and 52 per cent in Wisconsin.

GOV. LANDON'S denunciation of the reciprocal trade agreement with Canada is counted on to be particularly effective in this State. Dairy farmers have obtained little from the New Deal as compared with other farmers. Recently several carloads of Canadian cheese were shipped into Plymouth, principal Wisconsin cheese distributing center. The Republicans, even before Landon's denunciation of the agreement, were making much of the incident.

The Landon forces also are counting upon some of the conservative Democratic vote that went to Roosevelt in 1932 to swing to Landon. They point out that here in Wisconsin there is little distinction between a conservative Democrat and a Republican. The division is simply between so-called progressives or liberals and conservatives. The demarcation in political thinking is more pronounced here than elsewhere. Alexander Wiley, Chippawa Falls attorney, the Republican candidate for Governor, is described as a "red hot Landon man" but he has little hope of defeating Gov. La Follette.

Another occurrence upon which the Republicans base some hope was the recent primary election. In that election the Republican Party went from third to second place in the State and the Democratic Party dropped to third place. This is a meager hope, however, because the Progressives, still decidedly in first place, are for Roosevelt.

Incidentally, there is considerable talk here of Gov. La Follette running for the United States Senate in 1938 when the term of Senator Duffey expires. Should he be elected the State would be in the unique situation of having brothers occupy its two Senate seats. No more could the Senate secretary distinguish between two members of the same name by designating the State from whence each comes. For the first time some new designation would have to be devised.

Republican Nominee Welcomed In Wisconsin.

GOV. LANDON was well received on his tour of the State. He talked to large crowds as his train stopped in various towns and, in spite of extremely bad weather, he spoke to a capacity audience here. He talked upon a subject that is close to the hearts of Wisconsin people, social security. This State has gone further in reforms of this character than any other. Whether his denunciation of the Roosevelt plan and his rather vague substitute proposal will be popular remains to be seen.

But the most significant development in the Wisconsin situation is the Socialist-Progressive coalition. It has the support of the labor groups, of farm groups and of Progressives generally. It is frankly intended to be the nucleus for a new party movement. Meanwhile, Senator La Follette, in Washington, has been helping along the cause of labor with his investigation into labor espionage. He is working closely in this respect with John L. Lewis, who is trying to organize the steel industry, and with George L. Berry, who is openly planning a new party movement.

It may be that the country will see before the next Presidential election an alignment of the steel workers of Pittsburgh, the coal miners of West Virginia and the farmers of Wisconsin into an organization that will become a powerful factor in American politics.

Man Killed, 17 Hurt In Tire Store Blast

Flint, Mich., Sept. 28 (AP).—An explosion wrecked the store and filling station of the General Tire & Appliance Co. in downtown Flint today, killing one man and injuring 17 others, two so seriously that physicians said they probably would die.

W. Albert Hatter, 29, office manager, was killed instantly.

Seven of the injured remained in hospitals tonight. In critical condition were Hermann Middleton, 21, radio mechanic in the shop, who suffered a skull fracture, and Mrs. Philemon Dilks, secretary to Bert Beveridge, the proprietor.

Don Beveridge, brother of the proprietor, said the explosion apparently was caused by the bursting of a steam boiler used for tire vulcanizing.

Millionaires' Foe Ends Sitting Siege

Chicago, Sept. 28 (AP).—Mrs. Ruby Lucas, 43, ended her porch-sitting campaign against "the millionaire bankers" tonight by disappearing from the mattress on which she had sat for four days on the front stoop of a South Side bungalow.

She gave no warning of surrender, and none of the neighbors who had supplied her with food and hot coffee knew where she had gone.

Her furniture still was piled out front on the sidewalk, and so far as anyone knew, the eviction order that had put her out of her home was still in full force.

Her capitulation was a sudden shift in attitude. Shortly before, after three days and nights of sitting through wind, rain and autumn chill, she drew a squirrel coat up about her neck, readjusted her bedroom slippers, sipped coffee from a milk bottle and declared:

"I'll stay here until I get my home back or die.

"I'm warring on the millionaire bankers whose greed has turned the widows and orphans and destitute into slaves."

Mrs. Lucas was dispossessed last Friday for failing to meet mortgage payments during the last three years.

Party to Fight To Hold 'Gains,' Wagner States

Senator Tells N. Y. Rally Communists and Fascists Will Be Opposed.

By the Associated Press.

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 28.—United States Senator Robert F. Wagner tonight promised in a keynote speech at the Democratic State convention that the Democratic Party would fight to protect the "progress" of the last four years "equally from fascism on the right and communism on the left."

"We have assembled here," he declared, "to marshal all the forces of liberalism, to hold fast to gains already accomplished, to reach forward to the greater prosperity which lies ahead and to further the progress achieved under the incomparable and united leadership of Franklin Roosevelt and Herbert Lehman.

"This progress has become the ark of the covenant of the Democratic Party. We shall never yield its safe keeping to the tender mercies of the nemy.

'Shall Hold Position.'

"We shall protect it equally from fascism on the right and communism on the left. We shall maintain America's position as the stronghold of democratic institutions and the pacemaker of world prosperity."

Wagner's speech climaxed a day in which Democratic Chairman James A. Farley predicted sweeping victories for both President Roosevelt and Gov. Lehman, and Robert H. Jackson, Assistant United States Attorney General, assailed the tactics of the Republican national leaders.

Farley told the delegates there never was a time in the history of the party when there was "more reason for confidence."

Jackson declared the Republican Party has "no policies" and has "advanced no program except to criticize."

Budget Charge "Not Valid."

He said their "insidious and subtle charge of un-Americanism" against President Roosevelt "is not a valid charge," and that their campaign on the budget-balancing issue simmered down to nothing when the real importance of Gov. Landon's achievements in Kansas was considered.

"The budget of the State of Kansas," he said, "amounts to only $7,000,000, about the same amount as the budget of Schnectady, N. Y.

It was certain that the delegates would renominate Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, Lieut. Gov. M. William Bray, Attorney General John J. Bennett, Jr., and Comptroller Morris S. Tremaine tomorrow.

The high spot of the convention will be President Roosevelt's address tomorrow night.

Cowboy-Indian Game of Boys Fatal to Father

A cowboy and Indian game played by his two small sons ended in death yesterday for Michael Fitzgerald, 49, of Clinton, Md.

Fitzgerald died in Casualty Hospital from a 22-caliber rifle bullet wound in his abdomen—after an emergency operation had been performed to remove the slug.

He was struck down in his home, police say, by a shot fired by his 10-year-old son, Bernard, who was playing in the front yard with his elder brother, Thomas, 13. The bullet went through an open window.

A hearing will be held before Judge Horace J. Taylor, of Upper Marlboro, at 2 p. m. Thursday to determine the exact circumstances of the shooting. Bernard has, meantime, been released in the custody of his mother, Mrs. Catherine Fitzgerald.

Sims Is Lauded By President, Naval Leaders

Admired and Respected by Friend and Foe Alike, Says Roosevelt.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 28 (AP).—President Roosevelt said tonight the death in Boston of Rear Admiral William S. Sims, retired, who commanded American naval forces in European waters during the World War, ended a "remarkable period of service to his country."

"I was deeply grieved at the news of the sudden death in Boston tonight of Admiral William S. Sims, U. S. N., retired.

"His death marks the closing of a brilliant and colorful career in the Navy, the end of a remarkable period of service to his country. Dynamic and forceful, he was admired and respected by friend and foe alike."

Colleagues of Admiral William S. Sims who had worked—and argued—with the retired naval officer, last night received word of his death with expressions of deep regret.

"The passing of Admiral Sims removes from the naval picture one of its most rugged and picturesque characters, a stormy petrel, as it were, always battling for what he considered the good of the service."

The title "Father of Naval Gunnery" was bestowed upon Sims by his classmate and fellow member of the naval high command staff during the World War—Admiral Hugh Rodman, retired.

Served Under Sims.

Admiral Rodman served under Sims in Europe as commander of the Sixth United States Battleship Division which operated against the German navy with the British grand fleet.

When in August, 1935, Sims said the morale of the Navy was "continuously declining," Standley told reporters, "Admiral Sims has been retired from the Navy for a number of years and I do not think is in a position to judge Navy morale." But last night Standley, paying tribute, said:

"He was the central figure in almost every great naval controversy during his time. He was the center of the old gunnery controversy, the argument over armor and armor belt, the investigation of naval organization and lastly the question of naval selection.

"It is an interesting coincident that the general board's report on the selection was submitted to the Secretary of the Navy today.

"The entire naval service will deeply regret Admiral Sims' passing."

Admiral Rodman said Sims did more to promote gunnery in the Navy than all other officers together.

"He took it at its lowest ebb," Rodman said in recalling Sims' tireless effort to improve the efficiency of naval weapons, "and he brought it up to the highest type of efficiency.

Lauded by Daniels.

Mexico City, Sept. 28 (AP).—United States Ambassador Josephus Daniels, war-time Secretary of the Navy, tonight said Admiral William S. Sims, who died today at Boston, "was one of the most brilliant officers in the American Navy."

"At the beginning of the war, knowing how highly he was esteemed by the British navy, I selected Admiral Sims to go to London in the certainty that he would secure the quickest and most cordial co-operation with the British navy, with which our own Navy was so closely connected during the war," Daniels said.

Headquarters Opened.

Bristol, Va., Sept. 28.—John W. Flannagan, jr., Democratic Congressman of the Ninth Virginia District, opened campaign headquarters in Bristol today, preliminary to embarking upon an itinerary calling for his appearance in practically every section of the district prior to October 15.

Text of Winant's Letter

The letter of resignation sent by Chairman John G. Winant, of the Social Security Board, to President Roosevelt follows:

September 28, 1936.

My dear Mr. President:

On August 14, 1935, the social security act became law. The administration of its major provisions was entrusted to a board of three members. Under the law not more than two members of the board could be "members of the same political party." You named me to the board and as a Republican and as the minority member my appointment was confirmed by the Senate on August 23, 1935, together with the other two members, without objection.

It was clearly the intention of Congress to create a nonpartisan board, with personnel protected under civil service, and to insure nonpartisan administration of the act. It has been so administered.

The act itself was viewed as a nonpartisan, humanitarian measure. Three times as many Republicans in Congress voted for the social security act as voted against it.

Having seen the tragedy of war, I have been consistently interested in the ways of peace. Having seen some of the cruelties of the depression, I have wanted to help with others in lessening the hardships, the suffering, and the humiliations forced upon American citizens because of our previous failure as a Nation to provide effective social machinery for meeting the problems of dependency and unemployment. The social security act is America's answer to this great human need.

The references to the problems of social security in the platform of the Republican Party were disappointing. It was my hope that the position of the Republican Presidential nominee might be less so.

Today we know that both the Republican platform and the Republican candidate have definitely rejected the constructive provisions of the social security act, only to fall back upon the dependency dole—a dole with a means test, which in my State includes the pauper's oath and disenfranchisement.

The statements that provisions of this act are "a fraud on the working man" and "a cruel hoax" I believe are untrue. They are charges with regard to a measure which had the support of 372 members of the House of Representatives, as against 33 opposed—which met with the approval of 77 members of the United States Senate with only 6 against, which was upheld by the votes of Senator Hiram Johnson, Senator La Follette, Senator Costigan, Seantor Wagner and Representative David J. Lewis, a measure which was advocated by such advisers to the Committee on Economic Security as President Green, of the American Federation of Labor; President Frank P. Graham, of the University of North Carolina; Miss Grace Abbott, former chief of the Children's Bureau, and Mgr. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

I have never assumed that the social security act was without fault. I had assumed and even hoped that time and experience might dictate many and important changes. As you stated when you signed the act on August 14, 1935: "This law represents a cornerstone in a structure which is being built, but is by no means complete." But Gov. Landon's address at Milwaukee on the social secruty act was not a plea for the improvement of the act, it was a plea to scrap the act.

I am interested in the social security program not from a partisan viewpoint. I am interested in it as a humanitarian measure. Gov. Landon has made the problem of social security a major issue in this campaign and I cannot support him. I do not feel that members of independent commissions or boards, such as the Social Security Board, should take an active part in politics and moreover, I was appointed and confirmed as the minority member. While I retain this position I am not free to defend the act. Therefore, I am tendering you my resignation as a member of the Social Security Board.

No work I have ever undertaken seemed more worthwhile to me than my brief service on the Social Security Board. May I thank you for the opportunity of this service and join you in defending it. Sincerely, have ever undertaken seemed more worthwhile to me than my brief service on the Social Security Board," and asked "may I join you in defending it?"

He said further:

"It was clearly the intention of Congress to create a nonpartisan board, with personnel protected under Civil Service, and to insure nonpartisan administration of the act. It has been so administered.

"The act itself was viewed as a nonpartisan, humanitarian measure. Three times as many Republicans in Congress voted for the act as voted against it."

Winant was Governor of New Hampshire in 1925-26 and again in 1931-32.

In 1934, at President Roosevelt's request, he acted as mediator in the general strike of textile workers, and in the same year was appointed by the President as the American delegate to the International Labor Office at Geneva.

His appointment to the Social Security Board was confirmed by the Senate on August 23, 1935.

Bolling Field Bones Believed Indian Braves'

Human skeletons, unearthed during excavation work on Bolling Field, probably are those of the inhabitants of an Indian trading center, first described by Capt. John Smith when he sailed up the Potomac in 1609, the Smithsonian Institution announced yesterday.

The tentative conclusion of the Smithsonian archeologists brought back to mind Smith's description of Nacotchtank, now Anacostia. When Smith saw the settlement more than 400 years ago it was one of the most important aboriginal trading centers of Eastern North America.

Situated near the juncture of the Potomac and the Anacostia rivers, the village was occupied by "80 warriors," or from 300 to 500 persons. The warriors paddled canoes up the Potomac, which served as an avenue of trade as far west as the Appalachians.

Had they lived today, the Nacotchtanks would have been known as cosmeticians. Their principal "exports" were powdered ocher and graphite, which were put up in small skin bags and sold to the Maryland and Virginia Indians for use as face and body paints. In exchange for this, the Nacotchtanks presumably received skins and stone implements.

Landon Bound To Merit Plan, Says Hamilton

Promises Campaign Manager Won't Be Named Postal Head.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 28.—John D. M. Hamilton, Republican National Committee chairman, said in a magazine article made public tonight that if Gov. Alf M. Landon is elected President he "will not make his campaign manager the Postmaster General."

The article, reviewing the history of the civil service and lauding the Republican candidate's post-platform pledge to extend the merit system, will be published in the Review of Reviews tomorrow.

"It is common knowledge that the New Deal Administration, under the guiding hand of that master of the spoils system, James A. Farley, has assaulted and ravished the civil service at every contact with it," the article said.

Hamilton recalled that Gov. Landon notified the convention he believed every position in the Administration service below the rank of assistant secretary of major departments and agencies and the entire Postoffice Department should be included in the merit system.

"Lest someone miss one portent of that pledge let me point out that Gov. Landon will not make his campaign manager the Postmaster General," Hamilton wrote.

"The time-honored custom of making the chairman of the national party committee the chief patronage dispenser with a seat in the Cabinet is about to be discarded."

Hamilton said that President Roosevelt's executive order placing first, second and third class postmasters under civil service would be repealed if Gov. Landon is elected.

"With a decent respect for the principles of merit in Government, those places will be filled then on the basis of open competitive examinations, in which politics will play no part," Hamilton promised.

Further, Hamilton said Gov. Landon would encourage State governments to establish or strengthen the merit principle.

Lansburgh's Plans 76th Anniversary

The auditorium of the Jewish Community Center appeared to be a political convention hall last night when a meeting of employes of Lansburgh's Department Store was held in preparation for the seventy-sixth anniversary of the store. Green and red flares were burned outside the building and each section of the store advertised its location in the hall by standards similar to those of political delegations.

A presidential idea was carried out by seven candidates for president, consisting of seven heads of divisions of the store. Each had a campaign manager. The election of the "president" will be determined by the votes of the public as manifested by the largest increase of percentage in sales during the anniversary celebration.

The candidates, each the head of a division in the store, are Harold Singer, Martin Waxman, Max Hirsch, William R. Slepian, Moe Ginsburg, Sol Goldstein and Sam Melnicove.

Presidential Poll
Contest Column

This column will be conducted daily until October 30, closing date of The Washington Post's 1936 Presidential Poll Contest. Questions of contestants will be answered and other information, helpful to the contestant in predicting the winner of the election and the States he will carry, will be supplied from time to time.

$1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded 34 contest winners, with $500 for first prize. The contest closes at midnight, Friday, October 30.

Q. Are entries in The Post Presidential Prediction Poll Contest acceptable before the closing date of the contest, midnight, October 30?

A. Yes. Many entries have already been received. But it is suggested that contestants take advantage of the results of the next two AMERICA SPEAKS Landon-Roosevelt polls, which will appear in The Washington Post Sunday, October 4, and Sunday, October 18, before sending in their entries.

These two polls will measure and report any "shift" that may at present be taking place in those States where the election promises to be closest: New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Colorado and West Virginia.

Although the last AMERICA SPEAKS poll gave President Roosevelt an indicated 52.6 per cent of the total popular vote of the two major parties, with 292 electoral votes to 239 for Gov. Landon, several of the States appear to be very close. A last-minute shift of a few hundred thousand voters could throw all of these States into the G. O. P. column.

The AMERICA SPEAKS polls of October 4 and October 18 will probably indicate whether or not there is a possibility of such a change in the trend of the election.

Francis H. McGuigan, 21, of 1524 L street northwest, was stripped of his coat and pants and robbed of $10 yesterday by four men who drove him from in front of his home to a desolate spot in Potomac Park.

McGuigan told police he drove up in front of his home about 2:30 a. m. and was approached by four white men. The men forced him from the driver's seat and held him in the car while one of the men drove to Potomac Park.

They stripped him of his clothing and money and then jumped into a tan sedan that apparently had followed the bandits.

$6,243,388 Net Made on Stock, Witness Says

By the Associated Press.

Testimony that a group of 15 firms and individuals, including Arthur W. Cutten and Harry F. Sinclair, made a net profit of $6,243,388 on stock sales to an investment trust was received yesterday by the Securities Commission.

Hunter S. Marston, of New York, who gave the testimony, said Blair & Co., investment bank which sponsored the trust, headed the group. Cutten, the Chicago grain operator who died not long ago; Sinclair, the oil magnate, and Blair & Co. were listed as each having had a 21.75 per cent interest, with the Chase Securities Corporation having 14.50 per cent and other members smaller shares.

Marston said the group put up $13,000,000 to buy the stocks, which it sold two months later to the trust, the Petroleum Corporation of America. John D. Rockefeller, jr., lent it an additional $25,000,000 necessary to finance the transaction, he testified.

Both Marston and Elisha Walker, former president of Blair & Co. and now a partner in Kuhn, Loeb & Co., said in response to questioning by commission counsel that the trust paid gross commissions of $9,750,000 on stock transactions to Blair & Co. and affiliates from the the time it was established in 1929 through December 31, 1935.

G. W. Graduate Kills Himself In Detroit Park

Ends His Life by Poison; Did Not Know Father Had Just Died.

Apparently made despondent by overstudy and the fear, probably groundless, that he was not progressing satisfactorily, a former student of George Washington University committed suicide by poison in Detroit yesterday.

Fred Furbershaw, class of '23, was found dying in a Detroit park a few hours after his father, James H. Furbershaw, succumbed to chronic heart trouble in Miami, Fla.

Authorities at first suspected the 35-year-old son's suicide was prompted by his father's death, but a letter received here late yesterday by Dr. Thomas L. Furbershaw, uncle of the G. W. U. graduate, made it clear the younger man was planning his own destruction at least one day before his father passed away.

A resident of the Capital from early childhood until a few years ago, Fred Furbershaw died shortly after he was discovered lying in the Detroit park. At his side was an empty vial. In a pocket was found an unsent telegram which read:

Although receipt of the letters was delayed somewhat because they were incorrectly addressed—Dr. Furbershaw, a dentist, lives at 4422 Macomb street—it was held unlikely that the correspondence could have arrived in time to allow the uncle to forestall the suicide. Several letters were inclosed under one cover, the writer having included messages for his father and other relatives, as well as the uncle to whom he addressed them.

"Fred said he had been studying hard and that he was worried because he had not accomplished as much as he expected," Dr. Furbershaw declared. In the letter he told how his personal effects were to be disposed of.

The dentist said his nephew had no love affairs and took his studies with great seriousness. At the time of his death he was planning to pursue his graduate work at either the University of Detroit or the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Furbershaw said.

His nephew hoped eventually to do research work in medicine and had studied along that line at the University of Chicago, Dr. Furbershaw said.

By Sidney Olson.

The first full day's market trial of the monetary accord reached Friday among the governments of the United States, France and Great Britain ended yesterday with the statement by Secretary of the Treasury Henry L. Morgenthau that there had been no indications of "dumping," and no signs of a currency devaluation war.

At a press conference, the Secretary, after refusing to comment on any angle of the Soviet's denial that it had attempted to hammer sterling down on Saturday, asserted that the three-power accord contained "no definite agreement" on the exchange ratio of the dollar to the pound sterling.

Morgenthau was questioned on the exact specifications of the "gentlemen's agreement" reached last week. In discussing it with reporters, he pictured the accord as a broad, flexible and entirely oral agreement, "based on respect and honor among the countries participating."

He said that the moves from now on would be step by step, resembling "a child beginning to walk, stumbling along until it grows to healthy manhood."

"Child Has Guardians."

A reporter, with the alleged Russian attempt to beat down the pound price in mind, asked:

"Do you think anyone would want to push the little child over?"

Smiling, Morgenthau answered: "Well, it has three lusty guardians (meaning the sabilization funds of the United States and Great Britain and the coming French stabilization fund). Besides, I think the child will have some playmates soon."

By this the Secretary apparently meant the probable alliance of Belgium and other countries with the trio now in the "gentlemen's agreement."

The unusual verbal accord, which cannot technically be called either a pact or a treaty, passed through its first day very successfully, the Secretary said.

Insisting that neither silver nor war debts had been discussed in the conversations leading to the issuance Friday night of simultaneous statements by the participating countries, Morgenthau repeated that the press knew the entire story of the accord and that there were no side agreements or hidden deals accompanying the three-power move.

He was asked how the gentlemen's agreement defined stable currencies if there were no fixed gold content of the pound. In this connection he merely expanded his explanation of the flexibility of the accord.

Co-operation Planned.

In discussing momentarily the stabilization fund of the United States, Morgenthau departed briefly from his customary silence on this matter to say that in the past Great Britain and the United States have each used their funds to "level out the sharp swings up and down" in exchange rates. He said that hereafter these funds would co-operate to work in the same direction, and if joined by a French stabilization fund, would thus assure an international money equilibrium to some extent.

This was the nearest the Secretary came to a discussion of the possibility of international stabilization of currencies in the near future.

Apparently there are to be no immediate definite ratios set among the three currencies in the agreement. Each country will use its discretion in treating fluctuations in the money marts, he said, and the United States will be "in constant touch" with London and Paris.

He said:

"The three countries are working together toward stability in foreign countries. It is a gentlemen's agreement, based on faith and honor among nations. I know no better way to describe it.

"Everything we have heard today is hopeful. Everything everywhere was constructive. Banks, trust companies and the rest were all playing ball. Every legitimate foreign exchange transaction was taken care of today."

Disregards Queries.

The denial by the Russian State Bank that it had offered 1,000,000 English pounds at any price Saturday in an attempt to force a decline in the sterling value was met with silence by Morgenthau. He answered, "No comment," to all queries, directly or indirectly, relating to his charges of Saturday when he moved $5,000,000 of the American $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund into action to buy the Russian offering and push the pound up again after it had fallen from $5.02 to $4.91.

Yesterday the pound stood at $4.94. The Treasury's buying had shoved it to $4.96.

Speculation had steadily mounted yesterday on whether the present pound-dollar exchange ratio will be adjusted and when and to what extent. Associated Press reports from London that there is a feeling that the pound is at present overvalued against the dollar, and some Wall Street sentiment in New York for a fixed ratio at about $5 to 1 pound, observers everywhere waited keenly for a sign of the direction to be taken.

In New York yesterday, according to the Associated Press, Senator Elbert D. Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, hailed the tripartite agreement not only as assuring international monetary stabilization, but also as "the first real step" toward war debt reconsideration.

Thomas said the "real significance" of the accord was in the "informal acknowledgment of American leadership in money."

Borah Allies Shift Support To Roosevelt

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 28.—Edgar J. Cook, manager of the Illinois campaign for Senator William E. Borah when the Idahoan was seeking the Republican Presidential nomination, today announced he and some of his Borah allies had decided to support President Roosevelt.

Cook said headquarters for the "Progressive Republican League for Roosevelt" would be established here to line up Progressives of the State for the Democratic nominee.

At the same time, Cook made public a letter to Senator Borah in which he outlined his reasons for changing his politics.

"I believe that the nomination of Gov. Landon is not a step forward, but a decided step backward for our sorely distressed Nation," the letter said in part.

"I believe today more firmly than I believed in 1912 that behind the Republican Party sits enthroned an invisible power owing no allegiance and acknowledging no responsibility to the people.'"

In his letter, Cook, a Chicago attorney, expressed the opinion it was time "to put the public welfare in first place," adding, "this will not be accomplished with an 'invisible power' in control of the Government."

Cook said he was preparing a list of "between 4,000 and 5,000" Progressive Republicans of Illinois who would be affiliated with his league. He said Charles E. Merriam and Paul Douglas, University of Chicago professors, were among those who formed the league. A. J. Tierney was listed as treasurer.

Boilers in Schools Are Called Hazards

Charges that hazards to life and limb exist in unattended steam boilers in the District schools again were made yesterday by James Johnson, secretary of the International Union of Operating Engineers, in an open letter to Charles B. Degges, secretary of the Board of Education.

"Hundreds of children may be killed, maimed and crippled for life through a steam boiler explosion unless the boilers are attended constantly," asserted Johnson.

"We rsepectfully urge that hazards due to unattended steam boilers be given first consideration over every other complaint we may make to the board," he stated.

Other grievances outlined in his letter included the working overtime without additional compensation at faculty meetings, school dances and other social activities.

Seal Modifies Ban on 'Fixing' Traffic Tickets

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal yesterday instructed his aids at Police Court to use their own judgment in handling all traffic tickets and not to adopt an uncompromising policy either for or against the "fixing" of minor charges.

Calling a general policy conference, Seal over-ruled a blanket order issued last week by Rice Hooe, assistant corporation counsel in charge of Police Court prosecutions, against all traffic ticket dismissals unless there were unusual mitigating circumstances.

Following the parley, he said that he had told his aids to handle each case upon its merits and as the facts warranted.

Seal also instructed his assistants at Police Court to clean up all old cases that are pending, although he expressed general approval of the status of the office.

He found there are 48 traffic cases pending, of which only four are unduly old. One of these was instituted in May, 1934; another in March, 1932; another in March, 1933, and a fourth in May, 1936. One of them, a jury case in which the charge was operating without a license, had been continued 14 times.

There are 36 cases pending in the Municipal Police Court, Seal said, but only two of them are old. One of these dates back to April, 1934, and the other to February, 1936.

There are 101 jury cases awaiting trial.

A Way Out For France?

For five years, a period in which one nation after another has abandoned the gold standard, France has kept up an unceasing struggle to hold the franc at par.

Whether or not wise from the long-range point of view, that struggle has left deep scars on France's economic and financial situation. The disparity between France's own high price level and the lower price level (in gold terms) obtaining in countries that have devalued their currencies, has played havoc with the French export industries and tourist trade. The blow might have been mitigated had successive French governments been able to carry out a thoroughgoing deflation of prices. But efforts in that direction met with such great obstacles that the results were disappointing. And now, partly in consequence of the wage-raising and work-creation efforts of the Blum regime, the cost of living in France is again on the rise.

It is questionable, therefore, whether the French fight against devaluation can be continued much longer. Indeed were it not for the dangerous political consequences of letting the franc go the way of the pound and the dollar, France by now might have devaluated as Paul Reynaud and other French politicians have been urging for some time.

With the bitter memory of prior devaluation still vividly in mind, the French people have overwhelmingly opposed the abandonment of the gold standard. It would be suicide for any governments to advocate it, let alone put it into effect. And there is something to be said for this point of view. But at least so far as the tourist trade and export industries are concerned, devaluation of the franc might remove a serious disadvantage under which the French now operate.

However, the question of devaluation is no longer one of comparative advantages. The real problem which faces the French government today is whether devaluation will be a voluntary act, carried out, perhaps, in agreement with Great Britain and the United States, or will be forced on the government through the compulsion of events.

If it is voluntary, there is a possibility that it might lead to an international agreement for the stabilization of currencies. The usefulness of such an agreement cannot be doubted. On the other hand, if devaluation is forced on the French nation serious political consequences might result.

Undoubtedly the French would prefer to stay on gold if that is at all possible and if they cannot make devaluation a step in the direction of international monetary stability. France is still in the depths of a business depression; the deficit is mounting; the efforts of the government to finance itself by a flotation of "baby bonds" have had only disappointing results, and tax returns are falling off. All these factors have brought the question of devaluation very much to the fore.

Under the circumstances the report of the financial committee of the League of Nations may offer the harassed Blum government a way out. That report contains a veiled recommendation that gold bloc countries should devaluate their currencies in order to revive international trade by closing the "abnormal gaps" separating price levels in different countries. Should this report meet with a sympathetic response in London and Washington the bitter pill of devaluation might be disguised by the sugar coating of international currency stabilization and thus made more palatable to the French public and less dangerous to the government at Paris.

American Prosperity Is First Consideration, He Says Here.

By Robert C. Albright.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., last night hailed conditional stabilization of United States and British currencies in line with a devalued French franc as an augury for peace and a turning point toward world trade recovery in which the American business man will share.

Full strength of the Treasury's $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund will be thrown behind the tripartite realignment of currencies. Extension of authority to wield the huge sum in international exchange will be sought before the January 31 expiration date, he disclosed.

"Our own prosperity was the Government's first consideration," Morgenthau told reporters assembled in his office on a 7:30 p. m. emergency press call. "If this agreement should in any way affect the internal prosperity of the United States, we will take steps necessary to correct that."

He made plain that the United States could terminate the "gentlemen's agreement" if our economic situation is adversely affected.

Change Due to Be Slight.

The Treasury chief's opinion was that the arrangement would not bring about any great change in the relationship between the American dollar and the pound sterling, to which the French franc, once devalued, would be tied conditionally.

"America's position is fully safeguarded, while at the same time our actions should encourage peace and commerce," he told reporters.

"This will in my opinion be the turning point for general peace in the world. Stability of world currencies is the foundation that had to be first built before we could look forward to lasting peace and real recovery in world trade."

All day long Treasury, State department and Federal Reserve officials had conferred with Morgenthau in his office. Jean Appert, financial attache of the French [E]mbassy, whose Government took [t]he lead in effecting the agree[m]ent at Ratification by French Parliament Monday Now Awaited.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Conditional stabilization of the world's three major currencies, based on an approximately one-third devaluation of the franc, has been achieved through a gentlemen's agreement among the American, French and British governments, it was simultaneously revealed in the capitals of those countries last night.

Hailed by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau as "the turning point for general peace in the world" and by French Finance Minister Vincent Auriol as meaning the "economic recovery of the world," the agreement laid the foundation for the end of the devastating currency depreciation wars which helped deepen the depression. International stabilization of all currencies is expected to follow.

Thus the financial experts of the American, British and French governments, working secretly in the three capitals, have laid the foundation for what has been the hope of the world during the last three and one-half years—an objective for which the abortive World Monetary and Economic Conference was called in June, 1933.

This Government's adherence to the plan means it is through devaluating the dollar and that its present gold content will stand unless the arrangement just reached has an adverse effect on this country's internal economy. In that event the United States retains the right to act as it sees fit.

Only approval of the French Parliament was needed to place the agreement in operation. That legislative body was summoned into extraordinary session Monday. Meanwhile the French government decreed the temporary closing of all trade and securities markets pending the actual devaluation of the franc.

Japanese Warn China to Guard Its Nationals

Foreign Minister Tells Nanking That It Is at 'Momentous Crossroads.'

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Sept. 28.—Japan criticized China officially today for "making unapprechable progress" in settling Japanese demands for protection of her nationals in Nanking government territory.

"China now is at the momentous crossroads and must decide whether she will shake hands with Japan," warned Hachiro Arita, Japanese foreign minister.

"The opinion steadily is growing among Japanese at home and abroad that further negotiations (for Japanese protection) are useless. Should the negotiations terminate, the lives and property of a large Japanese population in China must not be left exposed to further damage."

(The Tokyo government has demanded increased protection for Japanese nationals in China following a series of incidents during the last month in which five Japanese have been killed and four others injured in demonstrations allegedly staged by Chinese.)

The foreign minister summoned the corps of foreign correspondents to his official residence to listen to the warning which he personally read in a somber, deliberate tone.

"If negotiations break down, does it mean war?" Arita was asked.

"But the navy and army who are the guardians of 100,000 and more Japanese in China are ready to carry out whatever measures are necessary to suppress the anti-Japanese campaign."

Reporters to Stage World Air Race

New York, Sept. 28 (U.P.).—Competitive flights around the world in commercial aircraft by two New York newspapermen were in prospect today.

Following announcement in the New York World Telegram and other Scripps-Howard newspapers Saturday that they are taking advantage of the opening of trans-Pacific air mail and passenger service by Pan American Airways next month to send a staff correspondent around the world by air, the New York Times yesterday published an announcement by the North American Newspaper Alliance that it was undertaking a similar expedition.

Both men will leave New York Wednesday night and fly from the Naval Air Station at Lakehurst, N. J., to Frankfort, Germany, on the zeppelin Hindenburg, continuing by commercial air lines to Manila, where they will board a Pan American clipper ship for San Francisco.

The element of a competitive race comes in, it was explained, despite the fact the two men will make the trans-Pacific flight in the same Pan American airliner, because getting to Manila on time to catch the trans-Pacific plane depends on the ingenuity of each air traveler. Each man must be able to arrange a schedule which will enable him to fly from New York to Manila over commercial lines and reach the Philippines capital by October 16—date of the departure of the trans-Pacific airliner.

Robbed by Rescuers.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 27 (AP).—Three professional Good Samaritans saved Gus Lindquist, 40, a barge captain from drowning in the Passaic River today and demanded a reward. When Lindquist refused, they beat him up, robbed him of $17, and fled.

Results of the tests, according to Lieut. Col. Wallace M. Craigie, professor of military science and tactics, will probably not be made known until late this week or early next week.

Jury Absolves Taxi Operator In Fight Killing

Pleading self-defense, James E. Burrbage, 34, a taxi driver, was exonerated by a coroner's jury yesterday in connection with the death of Essa Kattep, 41, also a taxi driver, who died Friday in Gallinger Hospital from injuries received during an altercation with Burrbage.

According to testimony, the two men engaged in an argument over space on a taxi stand in the 1300 block of Connecticut avenue northwest. Kattep, witnesses said, became angered at Burrbage's remarks and struck him several times. Burrbage backed away, but Kattep continued to pummel him. Then, it was testified, Burrbage struck his assailant once on the chin. Kattep dropped to the sidewalk, striking his head. He died a few hours later.

The jury held that Burrbage struck in self-defense and was attempting to protect himself by striking the other man.

Another verdict by the jury exonerated two employes of the Capital Transit Co., in connection with the death of 8-year-old Frank Gill, colored, of the 600 block of Virginia avenue southeast.

The boy was killed when he ran into the side of a Capital Transit truck while riding a scooter near his home, it was testified. The truck which he struck was being towed by a company tow truck. Both William Dooley, driver of the first truck, and Charles E. Gilroy, who was steering the second vehicle, said they did not see the child in time to avoid the accident. They were absolved of blame when the jury held the death to be accidental.

Domestic Kiss in Parked Car Leads to Arrest; Trial Today

For Armistead W. Gilliam the reward for legal osculation was jail. This morning he will face charges of "disorderly conduct" for kissing his wife while parked in front of a relative's apartment.

Gilliam, an assistant on the staff of the American Meat Packers Institute, called on Police Capt. Arthur E. Miller, of the Third Precinct, yesterday to protest his arrest the night before by Officers H. L. Morton and G. S. Eckles. He had been forced to post $5 bond.

He related to Miller how the policemen had come up to his parked car where he sat with his wife in his lap enjoying a little domestic affection.

"What's going on here?" the policemen are said to have demanded.

"This is my wife," he explained. The policeman began to question him about the Maryland license tags on his car. Gilliam explained that he had been living in Chevy Chase, had gone on a vacation and since his return had been living with relatives until he found another place to live in town.

When the officers remained standing by the car, his wife began to weep, he declared, and then he told them to move along and leave him alone. An argument ensued which ended with the policemen inviting him to go to the precinct station, which he declined.

They insisted and included Mrs. Gilliam. Both again declined so the policemen stepped to a call box and ordered a patrol wagon. Gilliam, seeing they were serious, persuaded them to let her remain, and at the same time partially convinced them that he was guiltless of any crime, but since they already had ordered the wagon, they decided to go ahead with matters.

Capt. Miller said that his investigation of the case revealed that the disorderly conduct charge grew out of the argument, not the kissing, but Gilliam insisted last night that the argument grew out of the kiss, therefore he was arrested for kissing his wife.

If he decides not to forfeit bond, a judge will decide the question

Boy, 15, on Trial In Murder Case

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Luray, Va., Sept. 28.—The trial of Marshall Broyles, 15, for the murder of Cecil Jenkins, both of near Stanley, will open here tomorrow morning. Broyles will plead self-defense, and his attorneys said today they had uncovered new evidence that they hoped would lead to acquittal.

In August court the jury failed to agree on a verdict, necessitating a second trial. Broyles is accused of stabbing Jenkins, who was 21, with a pocketknife in a roadside quarrel. Broyles is the youngest person ever tried in Page County.

Fortune Tellers Call Strike, Score Tea Shops

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 28 (AP).—The National Association of Fortune Tellers, charging tea rooms with "bootlegging" predictions and sabotaging the organization, today called its first strike.

After the first convention at the State fair yesterday, President Helena A. Perotta, of New York (Sypsy Lee), called a one-day strike against tea shops for Friday. Tea shop owners, she charged, prevented their employes from attending the convention because the owners were opposed to organized fortune telling. Tealeaf readers now get no salary, she said.

Brilliant Gowns Mark First-Night Audience at Theater.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Crowds lined the sidewalk last night to see distinguished Washingtonians who attended the opening of "St. Helena" and the inauguration of the Capital's season of plays at the National Theater. Gowns in the rich shades which mark the fall and winter gave color to the picture as the audience assembled in the boxes and on the main floor, and jewels added brilliance to the scene.

Mrs. Joseph Leiter, who recently returned from Beverly Farms, her summer home in Massachusetts, was present, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Nancy Leiter, and her mother, Mrs. John R. Williams. Viscount Henry de Sibour and Mr. Mannix Walker, with his mother, were among those who attended.

The Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings had with them the United States Minister to Hungary, Mr. John Montgomery. Mrs. Cummings was wearing a black lace frock and a short cape of scarlet quilted taffeta, on one shoulder of which there was a large cluster of orchids. Another Cabinet member in the audience was the tall Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, jr.

The Special Assistant to the Secretary of State and Mrs. James Clement Dunn were accompanied by their younger daughter, Miss Cynthia Dunn, who was attired in blue velvet. Among those seen as they found their seats before the first curtain were the Minister of Albania, Mr. Faik Konitza; Miss Barbara Bonnycastle, who was costumed in white, and her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hayes Warren 3d, the latter wearing an evening gown of pastel printed satin. With them were Mr. and Mrs. Austin Sullivan, the latter in a tailored evening gown of moss green crepe with clips of brilliants at the neck, and Lieut. and Mrs. Scott Dickson, the latter wearing a black velvet frock with collar and vestee of rich white lace and completing her ensemble with a small close-fitting black hat.

Others included Capt. William Ritchie, the Naval Aid of the Italian Embassy, Capt. don Umberto Cugia Marquis, of Sant Orsola; Mr. William K. Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. Abner Drury, Dr. and Mrs. Robert Moran, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Orme Exnicios, Commissioner Melvin Hazen and Mr. Otis Wingo.

Prelate Here Will Observe Consecration

An informal reception for friends and parishioners will mark the observance today by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D.D., LL.D., third Bishop of Washington, of the thirteenth anniversary of his consecration as bishop. In accordance with his usual custom, he will attend a special service in the Church of the Epiphany, where his consecration took place on Michaelmas Day, September 29, 1923.

Due to the illness of Mrs. Freeman, the day will be observed informally at Bishops' House in Washington Cathedral Close. The Bishop and Mrs. Freeman returned several weeks ago from Sorrento, Me., where they had been passing the summer and are established in their home here for the winter. Mrs. Freeman, who has been ill for some months, is improving rapidly. Mrs. Raymond L. Wolven, wife of Canon Wolven, of the Cathedral staff, and daughter of Bishop and Mrs. Freeman, who had been in Maine with her parents, returned with them.

The Episcopate of Bishop Freeman has been distinguished by many notable achievements, both for the diocese and Washington Cathedral. A noted writer as well as pulpit orator, he is regarded as one of the leading clergymen of the Episcopal Church in this country.

Before coming to Washington, he was rector of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., and of St. Andrew's Memorial Church, Yonkers, N. Y. He was born in New York City and entered the church from business life.

In 1890, Bishop Freeman married Miss Ella Vigelius, of New York, and they have three children, an only son, Mr. William V. Freeman, now of this city; Mrs. Wolven, and another daughter, Mrs. Mary Jaffre, who died on the eve of her father's consecration as bishop.

Relaxation at Red Cross Headquarters

Many members of Washington society are taking time from their usual social activities this week to lend support to the Red Cross Roll Call. A tea yesterday at the Red Cross headquarters at which Miss Mabel Boardman, national chairman, and Mrs Carey T. Grayson, wife of Admiral Grayson, received, was the one party in connection with the annual campaign.

Uniforms of the various branches of volunteer service contributed to the colorful picture. Miss Boardman, in a white uniform and cap, with red veil and red collar and cuffs, was the dominant figure in the group of women who gathered for the affair. The tea table, set in the auditorium of the local Red Cross headquarters, was decorated with bouquets of pink gladioli, and members of the canteen service, in their blue uniforms, served.

Mrs. William S. Spencer, chairman of this activity, directed arrangements, assisted by Miss Della Dennison, vice chairman, and Mrs. J. Noble Hoover. Mrs Spencer's granddaughter, Miss Arline Spencer, was one of the young girls assisting. Among the other young girls were Miss Nancy Brereton, Miss Anne Claude and Miss Manvilette Sullivan.

Mrs. Grayson wore a "roll call" cap, but instead of a uniform, a black figured print frock and a strand of pearls at her neck. Mrs. Ernest J. Swift wore a black dress with a white bow at the collar, and a "roll call" cap.

Mrs. John de Sibour, the former Miss Valerie Prochnik, daughter of the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik, one of the guests, was making preparations to take charge of the Red Cross booth at the Mayflower. Miss Marie Therese de Laboulaye, daughter of the Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye, was unable to attend the tea because of her duties at the roll call headquarters, where she is serving daily.

Miss Olivia Phelps Stokes, assistant to Miss Boardman, wore a figured print in tones of green and a little felt hat with a Robin Hood look about it. Miss Boardman returned Wednesday from her summer place in Canada and has been in the midst of roll call plans ever since.

Among others at the tea were Mrs. Hugh Matthews, wife of Brig. Gen. Matthews, in a tailored gown of old rose; Mrs. Emory S. Land, wife of Rear Admiral Land; Mrs. Walter Reed, wife of Maj. Gen. Reed; Mrs. Henry Gibbons, wife of Maj. Gen. Gibbons; Mrs. Philip O. Coffin, who was accompanied by Mr. Coffin, assistant chairman of the roll call; Mrs. William S. Pye, wife of the Assistant Chief of Naval Operations, and Mrs. Erskine Hamilton.

A cocktail party in the morning! It was something new for Washington, but the usual thing for the members of the Mexican team, the guests in whose honor Maj. and Mrs. Frank Whittaker and Lieut. and Mrs. Henri Luebbermann entertained yesterday morning in Lieut. and Mrs. Luebbermann's quarters at Fort Myer.

From 9:30 until 10:30 o'clock the visitors who will compete in the Inter-American Horse Show next month put their mounts through their paces in the small ring just opposite the Chapel at Fort Myer. The general populace of the Army post eagerly stopped by to watch. A regiment of photographers was on the scene and caught the willing green-clad officers in various poses. Then, when the last picture had been token and the cameras had been tucked back into their bags, the one and only bit of excitement of the morning happened. Lieut. Joaquin S. Chagoya, the youngster of the team, was taking his horse over a double-barred jump. Mount and bars came down in a hopeless tangle, but the rider, out of the saddle, clung to the neck of his animal, bringing cheers and applause from the spectators.

After this and a bit of exhibition by Maj. Whittaker on his black jumper, Dusty, everyone adjourned to the party, the very hour of which made the visitors feel quite at home. In Mexico, "tea time" is in the morning rather than the afternoon. The walls with their pictures and prints of hunting scenes and riders were a very appropriate background for the guests and their conversation. Further carrying out the "horsey" motif, the beverages were served in tall silver goblets, many of which were won by Lieut. Luebbermann in equestrian events.

Capt. Armando Villarreal, tall, sandy-haired and blue-eyed captain of the visiting team, finding that several of the goblets weer inscribed, examined his and found it had been awarded in a polo contest between the American team and that from Reynosa, Mexico, several seasons ago.

The Military Attache of the embassy here, Gen. Juan Azcarate, who was injured in a fall Saturday, was unable to join in the festivities yesterday morning, but he has determined to ride in the show, whether or not his arm is in a sling.

Mrs. Luebbermann was costumed in golden-rust woolen two-piece suit. Mrs. Whittaker wore with her beige costume an orange felt hat. Little Senora de Mantilla-Ortega, wife of the First Secretary of the Ecuadorian Legation, wearing oxford gray with a vivid green hat, and Senora de Huttich Palmer, wife of Capt. Palmer, of the Mexican Embassy, also in gray with touches of green, discussed the riding "preview" with Capt. Florenzio Lazo and Capt. Taruino Barriga, both of whom are aids to the Mexican Secretary of War, Gen. Andres Figueroa.

Capt. Francisco de la Rosa and Capt. Amaury Quiroz with Senorita Maria Elena Garduno Pombo and her sister-in-law, Senora de Garduno Pombo, wife of the third secretary of the embassy, were in the dining room, where they not only served themselves but gaily collected assortments of olives, pickles and sandwiches for their fellow guests. Others there included Mrs. John Milliken, smart in black and white; Miss Dolores Barreto and Mrs. Laird Dunlop, in chic tailleurs, the former in gray with black accessories and her companion in beige with brown accents; Mr. Robert Phillips, Miss Maria Teresa Macias and Senor Dr. Don Manuel Gonzalez y Gonzalez.

Mr. and Mrs. Farnham Lease Alexandria Home

Mr. and Mrs. John Farnham, whose marriage took place this summer, have leased the old house at 325 Queen street, in Alexandria, formerly occupied by Col. and Mrs. Beverly Ober, and will move in on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Farnham have been residing at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Howes on Twentieth street.

The Social Whirl

By Marylyn.

Senhorita Zazi Aranha, clever young daughter of the Ambassador of Brazil and Senhora de Aranha, has tired of a life of ease and no set schedule, and is returning to school this year. She has decided to follow in her father's footsteps and become a lawyer. This does seem just a little unusual, because after all, feminine barristers are still in the minority. However, one does not realize that in Brazil, of all the young girls who go to college (and most of them do) nearly half take up law, while the other 50 per cent study medicine. No letter and science degrees for them. When they go on with learning they really carve out careers for themselves.

Virginia Mackey was wearing a very becoming black ensemble at cocktails in the Mayflower Lounge the other day. Her hat of soft soleil was made with a high crown and turned quaintly back from the face.

John Charles Thomas on his Masquerader was among the yachtsmen who watched the regatta last week. He remained until Sunday afternoon, entertaining a party of friends aboard his boat, then weighed anchor shortly before the end of the races. Quite the opposite of his quiet slipping up the river last week will be his arrival here in December when he comes to sing at the first of Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's morning musicales.

Robert Graham of the Fairfax Hunt was all prepared for the fall season with a trailer he bought last spring for convenience in transporting his horse from one place to another. He bought it to fit a horse he had then. Recently he purchased a new Irish hunter, Big Boy, whose name, he discovered, is all too appropriate. When he tried to put Big Boy aboard the trailer the other day, Big Boy wouldn't fit. He was too big and the trailer too small. Mr. Graham prefers riding Big Boy to having Big Boy ride the trailer, so the latter is in the discard.

The Hugh Auchinclosses were having luncheon at the Mayflower the other day. The lovely Nina had on a dubonnet print—very chic—combining the fall idea in color and design, and yet being suitable for the warm days that linger on. Her felt hat was of the same deep shade. At a nearby table was Mrs. Edward T. Clark wearing a knitted suit of heavy white wool. With this she wore a hat, kerchief and accessories of dark blue.

Stephen and Eleanor O'Donoghue Nealon are back and all settled in their apartment on Kalorama road. Just around the corner young Daniel O'Donoghue, jr., and his bride, the former Polly Foote, are making their home. Starting out at a double wedding this summer, they are staying together, even as to location of homes.

Rafael Fuentes, of the Mexican Embassy, is so nice about the weather, no matter what it is. The recent hang-over days from summer time he dismissed with a shrug, while everyone else, especially those possessing new fall finery, bitterly complained. He won't be here for the white winter when it does arrive, because he is going down to South America. He had thought seriously of writing a book for his children, but only progressed as far as the title—"Christmas in South America," but without snow and frosted panes, holly berries and fir trees, his imagination refused to function.

Mrs. Newbold Hostess At Hot Springs, Va.

Mrs. Fleming Newbold, of Washington, entertained at dinner at the Pillars, at Hot Springs, Va., last week-end. Her guests were Col. and Mrs. William McKee Dunn, Mr. William F. White, Mrs. Sidney Kent Legare, Miss Julia D. Zimmerman, and Mrs. William Wetmore.

A pre-season drag of the Bath County Hounds, Mrs. Fay Ingalls, master, met at the Wilkie place this morning, under ideal hunting conditions. The kill took place in Dunns Gap, and the hunt breakfast was afterwards held in the tackroom of the Yard, home of the master. The hunt was in honor of Miss Susie Ingalls, whipper-in, who returns to Foxcroft next week.

M. Claude de Boisanger Will Not Return to D. C.

The Second Secretary of the French Embassy, M. Claude de Boisanger, who left in August for a vacation in Paris, is not returning to Washington, as he had originally planned. He will remain in Paris assigned to duty at the Quai d'Orsay.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Early last spring I asked your advice on how to conduct myself toward a young lady who remained very cold to my attentions, and whose mother, I had discovered, was confined in an institution for the feeble minded. I told you that I felt this was the reason she had decided never to marry; at least, that is what friends of hers had told me. Well, I followed your advice, but so far it has failed to get me anywhere. I have treated the young lady with kindness but it has only led to trouble for me.

* * * *

She will not give me any engagements. She has told me I am too serious and, in a polite way, has asked me to leave her alone. Inadvertently I have seen her leave her home in the company of another gentleman, yet she has accepted gifts and flowers from me, while refusing to go with me on the ground that I am too serious toward her.

* * * *

One day this summer I passed her on her way to work and gave her a lift. She said she was walking because her pal was on vacation. I said I would be very glad to drive her to work while her friend was away, but she said she would take the bus. I didn't see her the next day, so I wrote her a letter asking her how she felt about our friendship. She wrote back that there never had been any friendship between us and never would be; and also stated that such gifts as I had given her were unsolicited and would be returned to me. I doubted that.

* * * *

Soon after she went on vacation and I had a card from her. On her return, I received a package containing all the gifts I had ever given her. After a few days I wrote her a strongly worded letter, telling her I had visited and talked with her mother (much as I regretted to say so). This I followed up by returning to her one of the rejected gifts. Up to this writing it has not been sent back to me, although I have had a very sarcastic letter from her, to which I have not replied.

* * * *

Now, I would like to regain this girl's friendship again, if only to be just pals with her, as I understand she has no desire to marry but only wants comradeship from men. Should I return the gifts to her? They are of no value to me and I have no desire to go with any other girl. I adore her and the thought of her is an inspiration to me. I am unable to forget her and would greatly appreciate your advice. Yours very truly, B. J.

DEAR B. J.: I beg to differ with you absolutely. You did not follow my advice. You disregarded it entirely, and, from what you say here, went on with the same unwarranted conduct you had been practicing before you asked my opinion in the first place. I have before me your letter of March 27, and the answer which I made to it.

* * * *

Here are some of the things I said: "Since she has shown no partiality for your company, much less indicated any spark of serious interest in you, I believe you haven't a leg to stand on in attempting to change the course of the way of life she has decreed for herself . . . Since she has given you no reason to hope, she has given you even less reason to presume. And a high degree of presumption would be required to tell her that you have learned the truth about her mother and are still determined to marry her.

* * * *

"I believe the soundest advice I can give you is to forget her and console yourself by taking someone else to wife. If you refuse to accept that advice, there is but one alternative. You will have to hover faithfully on the sidelines of her life, demonstrating the unselfish quality of your devotion in all possible ways and your own initiative to win her love, a full confession of her secret and her eventual trust in the wisdom of your way of solving her problem."

* * * *

And have you forgotten these sentences: "If your love for her was any less gentle and unselfish than it seems to be, I would be tempted to say your investigation of her background amounts to indelicate and almost unforgivable prying. I would have said—had you asked my opinion about the wisdom of such investigation before launching it—that you were not entitled to gaze, however pityingly and understandingly, upon skeletons in the closet of her private life unless she herself had given you the key."

* * * *

Looking at this problem in the light of your second letter, it would appear that I erred in estimating the kind or quality of your love for the girl. Far from being gentle and unselfish, it is aggressive, domineering and possessive—entirely selfish, in a word. If you loved her enough to put her happiness and her wishes first, you would let her alone, as she asks you to.

* * * *

And if you valued my advice sufficiently to act upon it, you would have taken it as given on March 27. For then as now, my best advice was to forget her and look for someone else to love. But since I have no desire to set myself up as absolute dictator in the affairs of others, I told you what your alternative was. You embraced the alternative rather than the advice. But don't hold me accountable if it failed to bear fruit.

My sympathies in this care are all with the girl. I think you are making an unmitigated nuisance of yourself. M. H.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Time to Take Inventory.

With the advent of autumn there is a great hustle and bustle to prepare the house for the coming of winter. Storm doors and windows are dragged forth, freed from their dust and cobwebs, and repainted or reglazed. The heating lines are gone over and the furnace is cleaned out. We make certain that the roof is tight, and in the old days we protected the open space beneath the rambling porch that encircled the front of the house by banking it with tar paper. This was done to prevent the cold north blasts from sweeping against the front basement windows.

But what do we do for our physical selves? Should we not have an annual inspection made of the boiler (the digestive tract) and of the pump (the heart)? We cannot gainsay the desirability of spending half an hour or so once a year in checking the human machinery.

Keeping Well Costs Less.

The great gains made by medical science lie in the field of preventive medicine. This means that we now know more about the early signs of serious life destroying maladies and that we can detect their presence with far greater accuracy long before they have begun their health undermining activities. There really is not very much use in consulting a physician after the heart and kidneys have been abused to the point where repair is impossible. At best, the art of medicine can but make more comfortable the few months or years that remain. It is like taking the motorcar to a service shop with every vital part rusted or eaten away. Both the man and the car will need to be born again.

Checkups Urged.

Perhaps an annual or semiannual physical checkup would not be necessary if disease displayed danger signals at its very inception. As a matter of fact, cancer, heart disease and many other conditions come on so insidiously, so quickly, so gently, that we may be unaware of their presence.

Unless pleurisy exists with its attendant pain, tuberculosis may exhibit no symptom worthy of note until the appearance of a hemorrhage signalizes its firm hold on the lungs. Measles, on the other hand, pops at us like the bogey man with a loud "boo," and we recognize the malady with the appearance of the eruption on the skin. The same may be said of smallpox, chicken pox, scarlet fever, etc., but the so-called degenerative diseases display no early signs that can be recognized by the layman. Physicians would cure 90 per cent of all cancers if the lesions were identified and located within the first week of their appearance, and the same holds true for many other diseases.

There are business organizations that recognize the necessity of maintaining their employes at maximum efficiency. In fact, certain establishments will insist that every executive go through a complete examination once each year. Every pysician working in the Mayo clinic is so checked.

Your own personal physician is the one to do the job. He knows best your heredity, environment, working conditions, family responsibilities etc., but to be worth while the check-up must be thorough—not merely an examination of the urine and the blood pressure.

If every adult would adopt this plan we would lead not only happier and safer lives, but probably protect our families better. Furthermore, we would possess a buoyant sense of freedom from disease through the detection of an element of danger in ample time for repair.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

A SOFA looks like such an obvious idea. It's a simple comfortable and friendly piece of furniture, and we can't be too envious of life in the days before sofas were thought of. There have been wooden benches and settees for a long, long time, but they were hard, straight uncomfortable affairs. The upholstered sofa didn't come in style till along about 1600.

Upholstering itself hadn't been common much before then. There had been cushioned seats of various types, but real upholstering didn't become general till the time of Queen Elizabeth . . . sofas came after chairs, of course.

One reason for so many chairs without arms in those days was that costumes were so stiff and voluminous that they'd never have fitted into a chair with arms. As for sinking down in a downy sofa of this day and age . . . well, a lady couldn't have gotten out again because of all her skirts and corsets and a gentleman would have gotten into difficulty with his tight breeches. So it's just as well that those old timers didn't know the meaning of the term overstuffed as applied to furniture . . . though they demonstrated it very well as far as persons were concerned.

Thus must fashions in clothes and furnishings go hand in hand. The simple casual clothes of today are made for lounging, so lounge furniture we get. They do say that men quit wearing silk hats when they started to ride in automobiles—because they were always banging them getting in and out.

Massive Jewelry Is Mode

Deep turquoise set in silver is the exotic jewelry chosen to accent the mat-finish black frock above, with youthful raglan shoulders. Echoing the touch of color is the turquoise band on the high-peaked black velvet hat. The smart new eight-button glace kid gloves repeat the shiny accessory theme. Jewelry was never so popular, the more massive the better; one huge clip is newer than two smaller ones.

Claire Tilden Dress Pattern

SOFT VELVET in glowing tones . . . gleaming, luscious satin or soft crepe! What could be lovelier or more appropriate for this gracious Claire Tilden model? Important occasions are certain to come along, this thrilling new season, for which this chic frock will prove charming and smart! So easy to make, too, is Pattern 209, for its simple steps are greatly clarified by the accompanying Detailed Sewing Guide! Most becoming are the up-to-the-minute neckline, Gibson girl sleeves (long or short), and flared skirt. For a "finishing" touch, match your clip and belt buckle, and place unusual buttons up the back.

Pattern 209 is cut in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 requires 3¾ yards 39 inch fabric.

Send 15 cents in coin or stamps (preferably coins) for this pattern. Write clearly name, address, style number and size. Send orders to The Washington Post, Pattern Department, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Books Exert Little Affect On Children

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

STORY BOOKS for children first began to be written something over a 100 years ago. But our ancestors did not believe in missing any chance for training and guiding the young. So these books were interlarded with prayers, hymns, sermons and moral aphorisms. How much of this edifying material the children read is doubtful.

Children are much the same one generation as another—old-fashioned, conservative, and opposed on principle to literature which tends to improve them.

That some of these books were intrinsically good is proved by the fact that many of them have been reprinted shorn of their religious and moral trappings, and have become very popular among children for their real human worth. It is doubtful whether the original readers enjoyed them as much or got as much good out of the publications as do their modern descendants.

Books do influence children but not, as a rule, directly. There is no use in giving a child tracts. The child will take what he needs and nothing else, and no one can tell him what to read or why.

It is both useless and absurd to tell a child to read a book because of the high moral lesson it teaches. A book thus advertised probably will be the one book he will avoid. Nor is it wise to say to a child, "Why can't you act like the little girl in the book you were reading?" The child's natural reaction is to take a violent aversion to the little girl and be as unlike her as possible.

The modern child, like children of all ages, refuses to mix moralizing with pleasure. If he is influenced by what he reads, it must be unconsciously. He should be surrounded by the best that literature has to offer and allowed to browse. Whatever he retains will be of value in guiding and forming his character.

Paris Visitor Defines Charm As American

By Elizabeth Young.

CHARM and fascination—had you thought them synonymous?

Ah, but they are not. Your American woman is the most charming woman in the world. But the Frenchwoman—she is the most fascinating. Old stuff, maybe But can you get to the root of the matter? Analyze the difference?

Now comes once more to these shores Imgard Hebets Walch, German-born, educated in Belgium and Holland, long-time resident in Paris, much traveled in this country and on the continent, and married to a Bostonian, and she can tell us the difference. She does it in faultless English, free from any trace of accent.

"The difference is this," says Mrs. Frederick Walch, apportioning out tea and unsweetened toast for three at the Arts Club of Washington, where she is transiently the guest of her uncle, Hugo Inden, the artist. "The difference is this. The whole behavior of the American woman is absolutely natural. Therein lies her charm. The Frenchwoman is consistently artificial, unnatural, an actress. Therein lies her fascination."

Soon to Become Citizen.

Mrs. Walch stirred her tea and remarked on being "a woman without a country."

"You didn't know that? Oh, yes. But soon I will be an American. I landed in New York only five days ago and already I have taken out my first citizenship papers. Happily for me, the law no longer requires that I stay in this country 90 days after taking out my first papers. Soon I can go back to my husband and when I return to this country again I shall go to Boston and become an American." The prospect seemed to please her.

She explained that her marriage to her American husband in Paris in 1929 automatically divested her of German citizenship. And then her conversation drifted to memories of her girlhood in the Fatherland.

Matter of factly, this elegant slim lady discussed her one-time ambition to be a farmer. Those were in Germany's starvation days just after the war. She, the gently reared only daughter of a well-to-do banker of Duessdorf, went off to a farming school. And then she had her "practical year" on Prince Max von Baden's farm on the shores of Lake Constance.

Thrived on Farm Life.

Here she got up at 4 o'clock in the morning and spent all day until sundown in the fields. She plowed, guiding the heavy plow through the soil herself, following a two-horse team up and down long furrows. Sandwiches and apple cider were brought out from the house at noon. She harvested, dumping sheaves of grain into the threshing machine, lugging away 100-pound sacks of grain to the storehouses. She milked cows; there were long patient lines of them waiting to be attended to morning and evening. She did "inside work, too."

And she thrived on it. She came to the farm a pale-skinned, not very strong young schoolgirl, weighing scarcely more than 100 pounds. When the year was finished and she was ready to go, she was muscular, brown, healthier than she had ever been and she weighed 135 pounds. Life in the country had become one of her great passions; and one of her greatest regrets today is that she has no place where she can garden. She lives in an apartment hotel in Paris, and her husband's work keeps him constantly traveling the continent by motor. She goes with him nearly always, and she finds traveling more strenuous than farming.

It had been her plan, on finishing her farming course, to operate a farm jointly with a cousin of hers. Her father was to buy the farm and install them as managers. Then her cousin married and her mother's health grew worse. The plan was temporarily abandoned. When she came to America for her first visit, in 1921 with her mother, it was as much for the purpose of looking into American methods of farming as anything else. Another cousin of hers who had been in America 20 years, owned a farm in the Catskills. "Perhaps there," she thought, "I can learn more about the life I love." But her American cousin's health was failing, and very shortly thereafter he sold his farm.

She remained in America with her mother until 1924, visiting various friends and relatives, among them Paul Panzer, Hollywood producer-actor of other days. Then she returned to Germany, but recrossed to America in 1926, remaining until 1928.

Says Charm Is Naturalness

Harris & Ewing.

The Frenchwoman is fascinating in her consistent artificiality, but the American woman is charming in her utter naturalness, says German-born Mrs. Frederick Walch, above, who lives in Paris.

A Woman's NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Sept. 28.

THE LONG-NEGLECTED field of men's fashions is only beginning to be widely plowed and harrowed by the press, but one New York paper has for years been telling the poor things what tie to wear with what shirt, and all about the very latest touch in braces — galluses to me. This informative department has always been in charge of one Al Taylor.

ALICE HUGHES.

Now and then some nifty dresser, worried over some obscure sock problem, calls the sheet and asks for good old Al, the cloud-chaser. He gets Al, and he is knocked 20 feet from the phone when a sweet feminine voice says "this is Al Taylor."

For dear old Al is none other than the brunette and lovely Alvah Taylor, daughter of that great and deeply lamented Chicago columnist, Bert Leston Taylor, who was "B. L. T." to millions in the Middle States. Alvah was once the wife of the sports writer and fictioneer, Paul Gallico, who loved and labored on the same newspaper. All these years, thinly disguised as a male basso, she has been advising puzzled Gothamites what to wear and how to wear it, and the girl certainly konws her spats! Until the advent of our millionaire columnist and bon vivant, Mr. Lucius Beebe, Al practically had the field sewed up in a clocked sock—and she is still for the many, while Lucius, I fear, is for the few.

By the way, you can tell papa that Al now is urging the bloods to forget the casualness of summer dress, and to get into coats and pants that match. She also puts in a word for that strangler, the stiff white collar!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I scud about this place day in and day out again in search of a smile that won't come off, and now I've found it. It is frozen on the pretty face of Miss Kathleen Walker, who is hired by the biggest restaurant chain to travel all over and preside at the opening of each new unit. She's the great greeter, or Hostess No. 1—and has plenty of brains in addition to her good looks and that wondrous come-in smile . . .

* * * *

This town has gone around thumping its barrel chest and thundering what a populous place it is, and then along comes the Mayor's Committee on City Planning and knocks out its wind! This learned body, after a few minutes with pad and pencil, says that if our residential districts were fully built up we could accommodate no less than 76,000,000 citizens instead of the paltry 7,000,000 odd (quite odd) we now boast. Of course, many of us are jammed into these huge sandstone containers like sardines . . . And after all, what is a sardine but a New Yorker with fins? . . .

* * * *

And now the sheared lapin coat is a dominant sports style, and the mannish tailored Persian coat, with lapels and a vent in the back, is a very popular little number. And so it goes.

The Magic of Good Talk

How does she do it? Purely by the charm of her talk. She realized early that, just as a girl has to be trained to dance, play a piano, cook, she has to be trained to talk well. So Babs trained herself!

First thing she noticed about her own conversation was too much "I, myself, and me." So she practiced chatting with a friend for 15 minutes without ever using those words? To do this, she had to search for interesting topics. Books she's read, movies she'd seen, ideas.

Then, too, she had a tiresome habit of saying "How nice!" about everything. She found there were other words besides "nice," such as "refreshing," "attractive," "fascinating," "enticing," "delightful," "exquisite."

She has learned to be good-humored, but not too witty, never offending with that wit that nips at sensitive feelings. If she has a funny story to tell, she tells it quickly, crisply.

Learn the art of charming talk with the help of our 40-page booklet, Improving Your Conversation. How to talk to strangers, overcome shyness, fill awkward pauses, talk well on simple themes.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, "Improving Your Conversation," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of the booklet.

Walsh-Healey Act

For the time being the Walsh-Healey act providing for certain labor standards for Government contractors, which went into effect yesterday, will mean only additional work for some Department of Labor employes.

Secretary Perkins plans to establish a special administrative unit in the department to carry out the act. The board which will determine the policy of the department probably will be appointed this week, but creation of a force to handle the routine, non-policy work depends upon whether the department can secure the necessary funds.

Congress failed to make any appropriation for executing the act. The department has applied for a special grant from the $4,000,000,000 works fund. On the size of the grant that is to be allotted—if the grant is forthcoming—will depend the number of clerks, lawyers and labor experts that will be taken on. Under the terms of the act, all employes except lawyers and experts must be drawn from the Civil Service.

Today or tomorrow the Washington members of the A. F. G. E. executive council are expected to make a decision which will throw a good deal of light on their attitude toward the reaffiliation of the five temporary certificate lodges that were expelled.

Rain Personality

You may be surprised to learn that rainstorms have distinctly individual personalities, that they are full of queer quirks and tricks and have their "blind spots" just as humans do.

For several months now C. S. Thornthwaite, head of the climatic research activities of the Soil Conservation Service, has had 200 Western Oklahoma farmers on relief recording the "life histories" of all rainstorms. Stationed one to each 12 square miles, the farmers have been taking rainfall measurements every 15 minutes.

The results are plotted on charts and sent into the Soil Conservation Service office in this city. We ran through a number of these charts the other day. They looked like the amoeba and paramecium that used to be shown under the microscope in biology classes at school. The weird curves showed the intensities of the rainfall and it was surprising what tremendous variations there were. All rainstorms had their "blind spots," little white circles which indicated that absolutely no rain fell there, although all around this area the precipitation may have been heaviest.

Thornthwaite thinks these "life histories" of rainstorms will prove tremendously significant and may lead to a revision of methods of measuring rainfalls, but the experiment is young and he isn't jumping to conclusions.

The other night at the District Department meeting Mrs. Maude Anderson, of Internal Revenue, was telling some friends of entertainment and dance to be given tonight at the Masonic Temple for the benefit of the orchestra she has motivated.

"I owe $200 for cleaning and repairing all the instruments and if the dance isn't a success I may find the sheriff after me," Mrs. Anderson kidded.

Excursion

The District Department of the American Federation of A. F. G. E. is conducting two and three day all-expense tours to New York City over the week-end of October 16. The setback is $13.40 for the two-day trip and $14.65 for three days.

Included in the attractions of the trip will be visits to a broadcasting studio, a French night club and Rockefeller Center. If your curiosity is aroused, contact James Baugh, jr., at the Civil Service Commission.

Eight Federal employes are in the cast of "Alias the Deacon," three-act comedy to be presented next Tuesday and Wednesday at the Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets northwest. They are Harry Bozof, Malvin B. Plunket and Arthur Sammeth, the Veterans Administration; Charles Tuttle, Bureau of Mines; Bernice Kay, Agriculture; Stanley B. Rider and R. Truitt Miller, General Accounting Office, and Ellen Scholze, HOLC. The stage crew includes K. Hilding Beij, Bureau of Standards; J. Gordon Dahlem, Patent Office; Trudi Evans, Federal Trade Commission, and Lorene Nelson, Resettlement.

Hearings on the case of Robert Durand, dismissed employe of the Federal Power Commission, have been postponed until October 12 . . . The dinner dance of the "Thirty-third Club" will be held next Tuesday instead of next Wednesday . . . Bob Rice, formerly with the Interstate Commerce Commission, is now with the Railroad Retirement Board . . .

Latin-American 'Isms' Assailed

Latin America today presents a fertile field for communism, fascism and naziism or any other "ism," George Howland Cox, director of the center of inter-American studies at George Washington University, stated yesterday in his opening lecture at the university's course in current Latin-American problems.

The speaker held that, despite these dangers, hope exists for avoidance of the pitfalls of extremism. He pointed to an "ever increasing desire for harmony which gives promise of a happy future for Latin America."

"Out of the Pan-American conference in Buenos Aires," said Dr. Cox, "may come workable suggestions which will bring stability along lines of democracy known in the United States."

Widened F Street Area Opening Set Tomorrow

The widened and newly paved section of F street, between Seventh and Ninth streets, will be opened to traffic tomorrow morning, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, said yesterday.

Gas Company Reveals Plan For Stock Sale

The Washington Gas Light Co. intends to sell $3,000,000 in preferred stock to finance the proposed purchase of the Alexandria Gas Co. and the Washington Suburban Co., of Hyattsville, Md., and improvements in its plants, Robert C. Owers, treasurer, disclosed late yesterday near the close of an all-day hearing before the Public Utilities Commission.

Under the plan, as disclosed under cross-examination by Hinman D. Folsom, commission counsel, the Washington company will borrow from banks outside Washington at 4 per cent interest on an 18-months basis to pay the Washington & Suburban Companies $1,375,000 cash for the suburban plants.

Subsequently, it will issue the preferred stock at $100 par, offering 4 to 4½ per cent interest, and will sell it in blocks over a two-year period without having it underwritten and paying only the usual broker fees.

Owers predicted that Washington would provide a ready market for the sale and stated that time is opportune to sell "any good securities."

To Resume Today.

The hearing will be resumed at 1 p. m. today, with three commission witnesses taking the stand to present their estimate on the worth of the suburban plants and the effect of the proposed purchase on the financial condition of the Washington company.

The commission's witnesses are Byers McK. Bachman, chief accountant; A. W. Crosley, engineer, and Henry Saunders, consultant.

Under cross-examination Owers admitted it is his "impression" that the purchase of the subsidiary companies by the Washington company from its parent holding company, Washington & Suburban Companies, is necessary if the firm of Dominick & Dominick, of New York, principal underwriters in the proposed liquidation of the holding company, handles the sale.

Seeks Copy of Agreement.

Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, asked the local gas company officials to produce, if possible, a copy of the agreement between Dominick & Dominick and the Washington and Suburban Companies.

Both Folsom and Keech questioned Boothby repeatedly regarding a proposed schedule of rates that would save the Alexandria Gas Co. more than $8,000 a year if the deal is consummated and pointed out the officers of the Washington company and the suburban concerns are identical.

The commission asked, without obtaining a satisfactory answer, whether the reduced schedule would be placed in effect if the purchase is not approved.

Owers disclosed that the Washington Gas Light Co., after buying the $800,000 note on the Alexandria Gas Co., immediatley will write $800,000 of the security to "put the Alexandria company on its feet" and enable it to pay 6 per cent interest.

Gives Estimates.

Wihle he asserted that no separate capitalization for the subsidiary companies will be entered in the Washington company's books immediately after the purchase, Owers gave a rough estimate of $550,000 for the Alexandria company and $800,000 for Hyattsville.

Folsom asked Owers whether the Washington & Suburban Companies would not accept preferred stock in the Washington Gas Light Co. in exchange for the suburban plans.

He expressed belief the proposed purchase price of $1,375,000 is from $100,000 to $200,000 too high.

Many Methods of Fish Cookery Demonstrated in Lecture Here

Home Economist Tells of Value in Diet and Bakes 10 Varieties in Program Preliminary to Consumers' Council Series.

Fish cookery took on a new meaning for the Washington homemakers who assembled yesterday afternoon at the Bureau of Fisheries, U. S. Department of Commerce, to listen to Miss Agnes I. Webster, home economist, lecture on the value of fish in the diet and to watch her demonstrate methods of preparing it.

The meeting was a preliminary of a series of lecture-conferences to be sponsored by the Consumers' Council of Washington through the facilities of the local WPA Adult Education Division. Instruction in a wide variety of subjects—homemaking, consumer-buying, co-operative marketing, group medication and hospitalization, Government aids to the consumer and pending legislation affecting the consumer—will be offered this winter through programs to be given every Monday from 2 to 3 p. m., beginning October 5, at Webster School, Tenth and H streets northwest.

The meeting held yesterday touched on only one subject—fish.

"The reason more housewives don't cook fish often is that they don't know how," Miss Webster said. "They usually fry it, while baking is the best method to bring out its flavor. We want women to learn how quickly and easily it can be prepared; and we want them to realize that Washington markets offer consumers 51 varieties of this food."

She then proceeded to bake ten different kinds of fish, explaining each cooking step as she took it. The women who looked on obviously liked what they saw and planned to go home and try out Miss Webster's suggestions. They were even more impressed when they sampled her finished dishes of baked Spanish mackerel, blue fish, perch, croaker and spot. Later, they went on a tour of the aquarium at the Bureau of Fisheries in order to glimpse the different fish that can be bought in Washington markets.

This program and the ones that will follow it grew out of many requests for information regarding consumer problems, according to Mary C. Delaney, executive secretary of the Consumer's Council. The meetings, she said, are open to everyone. The teaching staff of the WPA adult education division, in charge of most of the classes scheduled, will be supplemented with persons who are outstanding in their field and who have a special knowledge of consumer problems.

Boat Mystery Baffles Brown, Regatta's 'Ace'

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, the well-known sailor and river speed demon (he also has something to do with the Police Department), yesterday found himself invoved in a baffling mystery—the strange case of the cabin cruiser "Coal Dust."

Like so many men who get themselves mixed up in mysteries, Maj. Brown was a sort of innocent bystander.

His plan Saturday was to watch the President's Cup Regatta from a harbor police boat. No police boat was available, however, so he and Sergt. C. C. Humphries got aboard the Coal Dust, a 40-foot cabin cruiser owned by Charles Smith, a coal dealer.

Late in the day, Maj. Brown was astonished to find that he and the Coal Dust were in a race—the cruiser chance handicap. He was even more astonished when he heard an announcer cry out from the Coast Guard cutter Apache that the Coal Dust had won the race.

The burning question now is: Did the Coal Dust really win? The announcer undoubtedly announced that it did, but last night L. Gordon Leech, chairman of the race committee, said it did not; that another cruiser, the Lola II, finished first.

Maj. Brown testified as follows:

"We hadn't any idea of going in the race. We were anchored out there, and we saw these other cabin cruisers—six or eight of them—sailing past. As a race it didn't seem very exciting. Somebody said, 'Let's get in it and make it a little more lively.'

"So we hauled up the anchor and joined the parade. The other boats had about a quarter of a lap start on us. The Coal Dust passed one boat, then another, and then another.

"When we got opposite the judges on the Apache, we slowed down. We hadn't entered the race formally, and we were going to drop out. But the judges waved to us to keep on going.

"Well, we got out in front before the first lap was run, and in the second lap we increased our lead. At the end, we heard the announcer say that the Coal Dust had won, and that the owner would get his prize at the National Press Club.

"Smith went aboard the Apache after the announcement. When he came back, he said something was wrong, that there had been a protest."

Leech, amiable chairman of the race committe, did not go into any details last night, but he was pretty emphatic in saying that the Coal Dust did not finish first.

Maj. Brown has not launched an investigation or anything like that. He thinks the best way to clear up the mystery as to which boat finished first is to make a fresh start.

Democrats Meet Tonight.

The Connecticut Democratic Society of Washington will meet at the Hotel Willard at 8:30 p. m. today. Senator Augustine Lonergan, of Connecticut, will speak.

Bocock Asks Larger Staff At Gallinger

Crowding Worst During Winter Months, Says Superintendent.

A plea for additional bed capacity and personnel at Gallinger Hospital was made yesterday by Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent, in his annual report to the District Commissioners.

Pointing out that 4 per cent of the city's population had been given medical aid at the municipal hospital, Dr. Bocock called attention to the crowded conditions, especially for the medical and surgical services, and cited "a crying need" for more accommodations to house obstetrical patients.

He said the hospital either should have a new ward or should be enlarged by adding the plants of the Columbia Hospital or the Tuberculosis Hospital, soon to be abandoned when the new institution opens at Glenn Dale.

1,236 Beds in Hospital.

At the end of the fiscal year the hospital had 1,236 beds, the highest number yet reached, and during the last half of the fiscal year the daily average was 900 patients.

Next to overcrowding, he said, the most serious problem is "lack of sufficient nursing personnel."

"In many instances," he said, "it is almost impossible to get the orders given by the visiting physician carried out. Such a situation detracts greatly, of course, from the enthusiasm of the attending staff in their work."

Much of the shortage of personnel has been brought about by the fact that the hospital doubled its occupancy and capacity within five years.

Considerable Sum Needed.

A "considerable sum of money" and several years will be needed, Dr. Bocock said, to bring the personnel up to a reasonable ratio with the patients.

The crowding is worst during the winter months, he added, and last season "the wards were crowded beyond all reason; corridors were lined with beds from end to end, while compartments for one and two patients were jammed with four or more individuals."

The total number of patients admitted to the hospital during the fiscal year was 18,860, of whom only 164 paid for the services.

3 Policemen Hurt Seizing Ex-Boxer In Row Over Shave

Ward E. Lowry, 55-year-old boxer, was held on $1,000 bail at the Fifth Precinct Station and three policemen were nursing cuts and bruises last night after Lowry allegedly refused to pay for a 25-cent barber shop shave.

Lowry, who also is known as Frank Fleming, walked into a barber shop in the 700 block of H street northeast, to get a shave. When the barber had finished, Lowry refused to pay him.

Tom Carter, Fifth Precinct policeman now on leave, was called to quell the ensuing disturbance. Lowry, unawed, went into battle.

A half dozen other policemen and detectives arrived at the scene and subdued the pugilist, who agreed to "go along quietly" with two of them, Patrolmen R. J. Tompkins and A. H. Guin, of the Fifth Precinct.

When the other policemen had departed, however, Lowry again started to fight. Finally subdued, he was taken to the Fifth Precinct Station and charged with being drunk and disorderly and with assaulting three officers.

Virginia Girl Sues to Enter D. C. School

Official Declares Law Is Permissive, but Not Mandatory.

Lois Kemp, an 11-year-old blonde, yesterday became the center of a bitter controversy upon the outcome of which hinges public school privileges of thousands of little boys and girls like herself.

Through her father, John S. Kemp, an assistant disbursing officer in the Public Works Administration, petite Lois asked the District Court for a writ of mandamus compelling Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of Washington's public schools to admit her to Gordon Junior High, even if she does live in Clarendon, Va.

She knows nothing of the "to wits" and "whereases" contained in the petition submitted to the court yesterday by Robert E. Lynch, her lawyer. All she's concerned about is matriculating at Gordon, a real junior high school, which she has looked forward to as a reward for having graduated from the grades.

This is the trouble, a trouble which is to be aired in court for the first time, although the non-resident problem for years has been a thorn in the Board of Education's collective side:

Because of overcrowding, as explained yesterday by Dr. Ballou, Gordon's doors in Georgetown are closed this year to pupils living in nearby Maryland and Virginia. With the new terms only a week old about 100 applicants have been turned away already, he said.

School Faces Overcrowding.

The school's normal capacity is 1,148 students, but it will be forced to accommodate more than 1,300 this year, as it did last, the superintendent declared, even with "outsiders" barred. The ban on non-residents, with the exception of military officers' offspring, is effective this season not only at Gordon, but at every other junior high school in the Capital.

Lois' fight for admittance is based on the section of the District code which reads: "All pupils whose parents are employed officially or otherwise in the District of Columbia shall be admitted and taught free of charge in the schools of the District."

Kemp commented: "In view of that provision (enacted in 1915) it appears that Frank A. Woodward, principal of Gordon, had no right to deny Lois admittance when she presented herself last week. I have been a Government employe since 1900."

And Attorney Lynch: "The law seems pretty clear to me."

Dr. Ballou: "In March, 1931, Corporation Counsel W. W. Bride held the statute to be permissive, not mandatory. Therefore it is within our discretion to admit or reject nonresidents."

Child Awaits Decision.

As for the child herself, leading character in this latest assault on the Washington school sysmtem's nonresident laws and regulations, she is content to play with her toys and be instructed by a private tutor.

Lois attended Fillmore Elementary School, which adjoins Gordon, until last June. She has a younger sister now enrolled in Fillmore. Two other sisters are students at Western High School.

Kemp asserted he moved from the District into nearby Virginia 15 years ago "to get my children out of the path of automobiles." He lives at 2010 North Adams street, Clarendon.

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, of District Court, set October 1 as the date for hearing of the mandamus petition, at which time Dr. Ballou must show cause why the writ should not be granted.

Awaits Court Ruling

Citizens' Group Would Change School Hours

Mid-City Association Asks Daily Opening at 9:30 to Avoid Traffic.

A proposal to change the opening hour of schools from 9 to 9:30 a. m. was favored last night by the Mid-City Citizens Association, meeting in Thomson School.

The change of hours, the association felt, would reduced the traffic hazard to children, who now are forced to combat rush hour traffic.

A resolution asking the re-establishment of the old Second Precinct Station in the building on Fifth street now occupied by the Women's Bureau was adopted. In the discussion it was stated that crime in the area has increased since the old Second and Eighth Precincts were combined.

On motion of Miss Edith Grosvener, a resolution of thanks to C. Marshall Finnan, National Capital Parks superintendent, for improvement work in Franklin and Lafayette parks, was unanimously adopted. It was voted to send copies of the resolution to Secretary Ickes.

A committee of 14, headed by Frank B. Hoffman, was appointed to co-operate with the Merchants and Manufacturers Association in the dedication ceremonies on F street after improvements there are finished next month.

A. J. Driscoll, president of the association, appointed Paul A. Graves, Dr. Thomas Evans and Miss Emily Baker to the auditing committee and F. B. Hoffman, Maud F. Miller and Capt. Hugh H. Jones to the nominating committee.

R. W. Eaves, recently named principal of Thomson School to fill the vacancy left by the death of Charles K. Finkel, delivered a short address in which he stressed the need for co-operation between school heads and community groups.

Civitans to Hear Wilkes.

James C. Wilkes, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of the District, will be guest speaker at the Civitan Club's luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel at 12:30 p. m. today. His subject will be "The Republican Party and the Coming Election."

1,597 Signed By Red Cross On First Day

U. S. Division Reports Majority of Returns on Initial List.

At the end of the first day of the drive for funds a total of 1,597 enrollments were reported officially.

All day yesterday, afoot, over the air and via postal service, workers were striving to make the twentieth annual roll call the greatest peacetime membership drive in the history of the District.

7,000 Workers Active.

More than 7,000 volunteer solicitors started yesterday morning on the campaign, which will end October 16.

Washington's goal has been set by officials at 65,000, and they are hopeful of going even higher.

The majority of yesterday's returns were reported from the Government division, of which Gen. Fred W. Boschen, chief of finance of the Army, is chairman. A number of real estate and banking units, under Robert V. Fleming, chairman of the Riggs National Bank, also have reported.

Government Units Report.

Among Government units reporting were the PWA, the Railroad Retirement Board, the Veterans' Administration, the D. C. Government Refuse Department, the Resettlement Administration, the United States Supreme Court and the Bureau of the Budget.

Returns in the financial and real estate groups were reported by Floyd E. Downs Co., Columbia Permanent Building Association, L. E. Brueninger, Thomas E. Jarrell, Peyser & Dreyfuss, Howenstein Bros., Riggs Bank, Export-Import Bank, Alexander Brown & Sons, W. E. Booker & Co., and Loomis, Sayles & Co.

Roads Unit Plans Drive for Funds

Meeting in Cherrydale Fireman's Hall, the Great Falls and Old Dominion Roads Association last night made plans to raise $4,500 for labor and material to be used along the abandoned right of way of the Old Dominion Line.

A special committee to solicit funds was named.

U. S. Saves $35,000 On D. C. Gasoline Tax

Gathering data for J. L. Jacobs, director of the President's fiscal relations study, they figured that the Government uses approximately 1,800,000 gallons of gasoline yearly for its fleets of trucks and passenger cars.

Thieves Snare Cook's 'Nest-Egg,' Dim Hopes of Easy Life in Tokyo

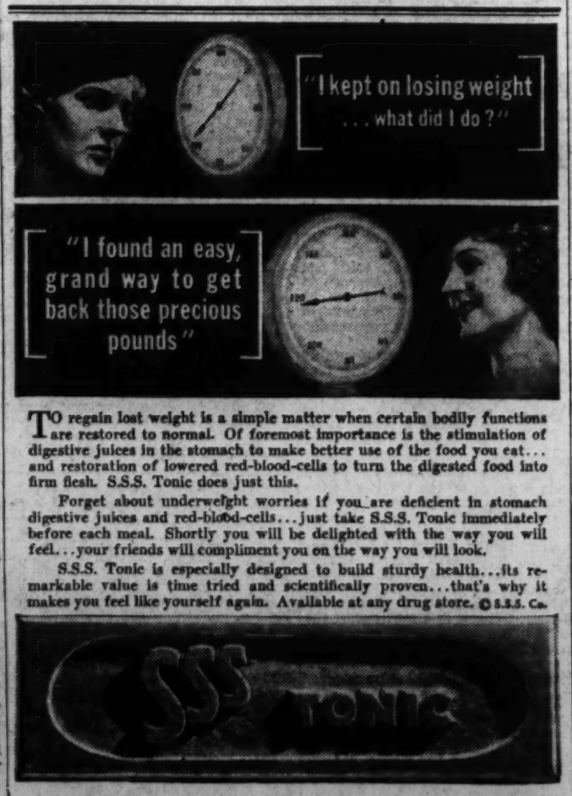
For the long and dreary years he served as a cook in the Navy, Tsuni Kano, 64-year-old Japanese, rewarded himself with dreams—dreams of returning to his native Tokyo, and strolling up and down the Ginza, umbrella in hand, a man of consequence and means.

Kano saved his money and yesterday, even as he could pluck the cherry blossoms of his ambitions by buying steamship tickets that would take him first to Honolulu, then Japan, he drew $330 out of the bank.

He went into a store at Seventh and E streets northwest and elbowed happily through the occidental crowds, which soon, for him, would be transferred into Oriental men and women. Two men jostled him into a corner and their hands rifled his pockets.

Kano went tearfully to police. The money was not all he had in the world, but it represented at least a year of luxury in Japan.

Detectives sought the thieves last night while Kano sat in his bedroom and looked at the autumn sky, which seemed to be dipping in a combination of silver and gold toward the horizon and the Far East.



TO regain lost weight is a simple matter when certain bodily functions are restored to normal. Presenting the same sort of biographical drama as was revealed in "Victoria Regina," Max Gordon's production of "St. Helena," an interesting and handsomely staged recital of certain episodes in the days of Napoleon's exile on "the rock," last night opened the 101st season of the National Theater with a typically brilliant Washington first-night audience in attendance.

The play, episodic in form, and betraying a decided tendency toward retarded action in its second act, was received with volumes of appreciative applause for a valiant effort at the fall of the final curtain.

Is Lavish Production.

Staged with a profligacy of scene and investiture that exceeds either "Dodsworth" or "Pride and Prejudice," which, it will be recalled, Mr. Gordon also sponsored, "St. Helena" unfolds a panorama of colorful stage pictures that stamps it as one of the most impressive pictorial achievements of recent years on the boards of the living theater. Furthermore, it humanizes and brings into some intimacy with the audience the character of a world conqueror who has been both extolled as benefactor of the human race and condemned as butcher of men.

The formula that has been followed in contriving the sequence of personal vignettes that go to make up "St. Helena," as already intimated, is identical with that pursued in shaping the intimate glimpses of another royal life that composed the diverting sequences of "Victoria Regina." The chief point of difference lies in the fact that the present fine piece of writing by R. C. Sherriff and Jeanne de Casalis lacks every vestige of romantic interest. Napoleon's love affairs were behind him at the period of the present drama. The nearest to a touch of tender sentiment that enters the play comes when he receives the long delayed bust of his son, held up interminably by an antagonistic British leftenant general, governor of the island on which he was marooned.

Is a Man's Play.

But despite the absence of any dominant feminine interest it is not possible to say that here is not commanding and stirring drama unless one wishes to assume that there was no drama in the amazing career that rose in crimson glory at Austerlitz and sank in tragic doom at Waterloo. Throughout the movement of the incidents that comprise the episodic narrative of a leader of men, brought to the contumely of a prisoner watched over by alien orderlies, is a reflection of the profound philosophy, the austerity and the gentleness of a man who was a hero at 25 and had faded out of the world picture at an age when most men are still feeling their way along toward some definite and worthy goal.

There is great impressiveness in Napoleon's speculation as to when he might best have died. It is not a morbid discussion, but a detached contemplation of a destiny he could not quite comprehend. Not many human moods and emotions are omitted from the warp and woof of the Sherriff-de Casalis collaboration. The only conspicuous frailty of the drama is that they are preponderantly masculine. Scene after scene is played with no women on stage, although when Kay Strozzi and Rosamond Pinchot are present their work is charming, if not especially important to the major purposes of the drama.

Is Triumph for Star.

Whether "St. Helena" is an item of universal appeal in the theater or not, there can be no gainsaying the degree of personal triumph it registers for Maurice Evans, who appears in the prodigiously exacting role of the Little Corsican. The play lives, moves and has its being in the indefatigable and apparently inexhaustible person of Mr. Evans. He discharges every demand made upon him with that splendid vigor, gracefulness and finesse that were promised by his exceptionally moving performance as Romeo to Katharine Cornell's Juliet, when the Shakespeare tragedy was seen in the Capital on the same stage.

There are many more who contribute generously and capably to the many scenes of a play that will afford students of history and biography a rich evening of entertainment. Foremost among them I should place Reginald Mason, as Gen. Count Bertrand; Joseph Macauley, who, if memory serves, long devoted able talents to operetta and musical comedy, here faced with a trying task in the part of Gen. Baron Gourgaud; Stephen Appleby, as Gen. Count Montholon, and Alan Wheatley for a finely executed mincing bit as Count Las Cases.

These hurried midnight recitations would be unjustly incomplete if they omitted some mention of Marc Loebell, as Napoleon's valet; Percy Waram, as Sir Hudson Lowe, and Frances Pierlot's Abbe Buonovita.

From every standpoint of conscientious effort, painstaking attention to the minutest detail of production and a magnificently conceived series of settings by Jo Mielziner, Mr. Gordon and his director, Robert Sinclair, deserve a hit comparable with the numerous others that have decorated the American theater under their auspices in previous seasons.

About the Showshops

THOSE with sturdy memories will recall a remote day in the early history of the silent screen when any film measuring a total of 100 feet was considered too long!

That, of course, was 'way back before the days of pictured narrative. All that a motion picture was required to do then was to move. Beginning with "The Great Train Robbery," first of the "movie" dramas, all this became different. Films took on more and more footage until now we seem to have reached the ultimate in sustained entertainment on the screen.

BELL.

This thought is suggested by the presence on local screens this week of an usual number of "super specials"—"Anthony Adverse," at the Metropolitan, following record engagements at the Earle and Ambassador; "The Great Ziegfeld," at Loew's Palace, and "Grand Hotel" at the refurbished Rialto, to name only the most imposing of the films that lay claim to greatness in conception, casting and treatment as well as length.

These current local exhibitions may be said to strike a fair average of the latter day trend in picture making. They are not "padded" attempts to stretch feeble stories into great length, but an honest effort on the part of major producers to do justice to subjects which a few years ago the cinema would not have had the courage to approach.

"Anthony Adverse" does an uncommonly fine job of condensing into a fast-moving, spectacular and exciting screen play all of the salient features of Hervey Allen's colossal book that sprawled over more than 1,200 pages. In sharpening the characterization and movement of the printed story, the Warner Brothers demonstrated a fine capacity for apprehending the basic requirements of the medium in which they traffic. It is not necessary at this time to remark again that Fredric March, Claude Rains, Olivia de Havilland, Anita Louise and the other principals in the cast turn in performances well calculated to hold the attention of all lovers of romantic action-drama.

So competently have all concerned dispatched their duties in the fashioning of this picture that its definite public appeal is such as to suggest that "Anthony" well may go another week after this on the Metropolitan screen. Not official—just a personal, off-the-record guess.)

Imagine an "Anthony Adverse," a "Great Ziegfeld" or a "Grand Hotel" only 100 feet long, instead of so many thousand feet that it takes a mechanical contraption to add them up and estimate the running time! If your imagination is that good, you ought to be writing plays yourself.

The lads sitting behind the big, glass-topped desks are at it again. Last night the Belasco broke out a revival of "The Magnificent Obsession," with Irene Dunne and Robert Taylor, at a final 10 o'clock showing and tomorrow Manager Hardie Meakin will supplant "Swing Time," the Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers perennial, with "My Man Godfrey," costarring Carole Lombard and William Powell. If this Eric Hatch novel films with even a remote approximation of its humorous readability, it should turn out to be one of the laugh riots of the season. According to Mr. Meakin's westernunion, that is precisely what is happening everywhere the film has shown.

It was remarked here yesterday morning that the "St. Helena" company held a dress rehearsal in the National Theater Sunday night, beginning just as soon as Producer Max Gordon had finished with the business of that broiled live lobster up at Freddie Buchholz' refectory. What with the trying out of the elaborate revolving stages and all, the whole merry goings-on lasted only until about 3 a. m. Monday. That's the way stage plays are born.

Incidentally, it is of interest to note that "St. Helena" is staged with all of the elaborateness of the same producer's "Dodsworth"—quick changes, massive sets and a sumptuous production by Jo Mielziner. Mr. Gordon is not one who skimps in the theater. When he puts on a show, he puts on a show.

Incidentally, "Dodsworth" in film form will be the attraction at Loew's Palace following the current engagement of "The Great Ziegfeld." Walter Huston enacts his original role, with Ruth Chatterton in the Fay Bainter part of his frivolous wife. Sidney Howard, who adapted the Sinclair Lewis novel to the stage, also is author of the screen version.

So that amiable Beau Brummel, Master Lou Janof, who commercializes art for the sake of many things, returns from New York and a round of the gay night spots bearing a scribbled card of greeting from our old friend and nervous dynamo, Fifi D'Orsay, whose scribbling embraces many things pleasant to contemplate. It would be interesting to know, however, why she refers so affectionately to this diminutive column as "Beeg Boy." It must be the gal's memory is slipping.

It seems they still keep up the practice of previewing pictures, too. Today at 1:30 in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange they are unspooling "Old Hutch," Wallace Beery's newest starring vehicle for the critical gentry. More of this homely business at a later time—maybe tomorrow, the fates being propitious.

The Gossipel Truth.

Hollywood, Sept. 28.

Earl Carroll dancing with Madeleine Carroll at the opening of the Clover Club, which is keeping the name Carroll together . . . The Pat O'Briens are going to adopt a baby boy, and Mrs. Eloise O'Brien will make a trip to the famous Chicago "cradle" . . . Richard Herndon was let out as assistant director at Twentieth Century-Fox, believing that this might discourage the Dixie Dunbar romance, but they continue to care much for each other . . . Margo says one of her ambitions is to play in a picture with Fred Astaire, and this could come to pass, for Margo was a dancer before she turned dramatic actress . . . Lenore Ulric got a yen for New York and left Hollywood before the flicker, "Camille," was completed, and now Metro is trying to locate Miss Ulric to get her back for more scenes . . . Sign on a movie marquee "Robert Taylor — 'The Gorgeous Hussy.'"

DeHAVILAND.

Olivia de Havilland seldom goes stepping at the gay night spots, but her companion at the movies is Clive Halliday . . . Irving Berlin wrote a song about skating for a finale in "As Thousands Cheer" which was never used. He dislikes the song, and, because he does, his friends kid him by singing it to him . . . Last week Berlin said to Charlie Lederer: "I meant to give you a present, but neglected to. How would you like a song for a present?" . . . Lederer said he would be delighted to have a song privately his own . . . Berlin gave him the skating song. Next, Berlin learned that this song was sold to Pando Berman for $10,000 to be used in a Fred Astaire flicker . . . Now, Irving Berlin may know that it was a gag sale, merely to kid him.

Mary Astor is very delighted because she gets her daughter, Marylyn, back on October 1 . . . Lawrence Schwab's first assignment at Twentieth Century-Fox is the Eddie Cantor flicker, which will be the story of Cantor's career in show business . . . Bess Meredith, recently divorced from Director Michael Curtiz, is keeping steady company with him, and says that the two of them have never had better times . . . Also, the day after Binnie Barnes announced that she was getting a divorce from her husband, Samuel Joseph, she was out dancing with him.

There's a novel song called "Handy With Your Feet," written by Johnny Mercer and Dick Whiting in the "Ready, Willing and Able" flicker . . . The dancers do handies with their feet in this manner: An impersonation of Charlie Chaplin, and Jim Farley giving away stamps . . .

Adrian Martin, a pretty lass, has left for Manhattan to be in the George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart show, "You Can't Take It With You" . . . Director Archie Mayo, when he was being kidded that he shot the wrong scenario, niftied: "Do you think I'd shoot the one they gave me?"

Alice Faye and Tony Martin are singing the same language . . . At a recent party an actress-singer sang, and then a noted tenor believed he was entertaining by singing a song he liked. When he finished, Tom Jenk, very loudly, said to the actress: "I like your singing much better. At least I can't hear it" . . . Patricia Ellis is taking care of Dennis Moore while his gal friend, Paula Stone, is out of town. . . . Booth Tarkington will be plenty surprised when he sees the latest flicker version of "Penrod and Sam" on the screen, for there are now gangsters and G-men in it . . . Herbert Marshall is dissatisfied with the billing he is receiving in "Girls' Dormitory," and he is thinking of taking a full-page advertisement in the picture trade papers, and the advertisement will read: "Herbert Marshall—pronounced Simone Simon."

"MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION." Universal picturization of a story by Lloyd C. Douglas, with screen play by George O'Neil, Sarah Y. Mason and Victor Heerman, starring Irene Dunne and Robert Taylor, supported by Charles Butterworth, Betty Furness, Sara Haden, Ralph Morgan, Henry Armetta, Gilbert Emery, Arthur Hoyt, Crauford Kent, Beryl Mercer, Cora Sue Collins, Arthur Treacher, Frank Reicher, Purnell Pratt, Lucien Littlefield, Theodore von Eltz and Rollo Lloyd. Directed by John M. Stahl. Reviewed Monday night (revival) by Richard Q. Jones.

Few professions have been so fruitful in furnishing dramatic themes for motion pictures as that of medicine, and last evening at the Belasco Theater one of the finer examples in this rubric was again exhibited. "Magnificent Obsession," from the story by Lloyd C. Douglas, adds further to that ever-popular theme of man's redemption to strengthen the basic story of medical struggle.

Produced by John M. Stahl, who gave the world such pictures as "Back Street," "Only Yesterday" and "Imitation of Life," the directorial aspects of the film are of the finest. They draw from a grand cast (a few of whom are named in the italicized paragraph above) every ounce of dramatic value in the widely read novel.

While it is through the conflicts between Miss Dunne and Mr. Taylor that the major portion of the story is told, there is also the charming and inimitable comedy of Charles Butterworth to offer just the contrast to make satisfying entertainment.

Starting today selected short subjects, including a new issue of Pathe News, will augment the program.

Pergler Cites Need To Guard Liberties

Condemning those who would trample civil and political liberties in quest of a new social order, Dr. Charles Pergler, dean of National University Law School, said last night that "it is sheer nonsense to contend that true freedom can be achieved through the violation of liberal principles or the suppression of freedom."

Dr. Pergler spoke at an assembly marking the opening of the university for its sixty-eighth year.

Other speakers included Justice Charles S. Hatfield, of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals; chancellor of the university; Dean Eugene Carusi, of the School of Economics and Government; Judge Finis Garrett, of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals; Associate Justices Oscar R. Luhring and F. Dickinson Letts, of United States District Court; Judge Nathan Cayton, of Municipal Court; United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett; Conrad Syme, Thomas H. Patterson, Walter M. Romeo Becomes Little Corporal Remembered for his delightful performance opposite Katharine Cornell in "Romeo and Juliet," Maurice Evans, distinguished young British actor, now makes his second bid for favor from the stage of the National Theater in the role of Napoleon in Max Gordon's production of "St. Helena," the inaugural attraction of the National's 101st season of operation. Opening last night for the first time on any stage, "St. Helena" attracted an audience of distinguished brilliance.

The Red Pavilion

By Pauline Stiles

Decides to Make Plunge.

David hestitated in what appeared to be embarrassment. He looked at Pam doubtfully and then decided to make a plunge.

"When we got back to the bungalow Mallard made me come in. And after he got me seated with a cigarette lighted he told me abruptly—he told me that he's married but separated from his wife. You could have knocked me over with a feather! Did—did you know that, too, Pam?" David asked in Mal's own words.

"Yes," Pam said. "Don't look so distressed about it. Go on—tell me what he said."

"Not very much. He said it had been a most unhappy marriage and he hadn't seen his wife for years. That his chances of being free had been hopeless. That it was a matter so painful to him that he'd formed the habit of never mentioning it. He didn't believe in dwelling on misfortunes of the past that were over and done with. But he wanted me to know it in order to relieve my mind of any possible misapprehensions. He said he wanted me to understand that under such circumstances his interest in Ellen was merely one of friendship. And that if she'd exhibited evidences of interest in him, it was nothing more serious than a girlish fascination for the glamor his profession gave him. He was to blame though, he said, for not being frank about himself, and I could tell Ellen if I wished to. He went out to my car with me as if he could hardly bear to let me go. 'Stop by occasionally if you have time, David,' he said, 'and let me know how it goes with you. Try to make good for Pam's sake. And, David, please be thoughtful of her. . . .' Really, Pam, I think he got me that job so dad wouldn't clamp down and yank me home and leave you altogether alone . . . Pam—maybe I oughtn't to say it—but that man is deeply in love with you—tied up as he is in dear knows what impossible difficulties—it fairly pulls the heart out of one!"

"Pam!"

David Kisses Her.

David sprang up and went around to her and impulsively threw his arms about her.

"I'm always putting my foot into it!"

"That's all right, David! I've loved hearing what you had to tell. . . . Only I can't bear to think of him alone over there in that superelegant hotel—longing to be with us. . . ."

David stooped and boyishly kissed her.

"Next to Ellen," he whispered, "you're the grandest girl I know!"

After a little pause he said impetuously: "Pam, if you feel that way about him, why dont you go ahead and live with him!"

"I'd be willing enough—but he wouldn't."

"There," said Pam. "I suspect that's Ellen. She's been trying to get you ever since noon."

The usual place was known to the public as Carmencita Gardens. It was not far from Ellen's boarding house, and had a rolling lawn splotched with flowerbeds and a forest of fine trees.

When David came over the lawn Ellen ran to meet him.

"O, David, where have you been all day? I've wanted you so!"

"Why, sweetheart!" David exclaimed, trembling with delight. He put his arm about Ellen and for the first time she didn't stiffen, but seemed glad to lean against him. And while he led her to a bench under the tree he told her excitedly all about the day's great doings.

She filled his cup to overflowing by being almost as excited about them as he.

"David, if you don't make good on this big chance Mr. Mallard has taken the trouble to give you——"

"I will—I will—I will——"

"Well—that's the spirit, but don't get too sure and cocky. Determination's all right, but it ought to be overbalanced by the will to learn."

"Yes, grandma! Ellen, is it bucking the world by yourself that's made you so sententiously wise?"

Ellen gave him a look both amused and secretive.

"I've been raised a lot differently from you, David. You've been loved and petted and catered to and had everything handed to you on a silver platter. My dad loved us kids, too, but we had to work for what we got. We all had our chores and jobs. When we got up in our teens he divided the year in quarters and each one of us took turns running the house and paying the bills. We found out what a man is up against supporting a family and meeting his bills month after month. We weren't quite so ready to spend his money, and learned pretty quick to hang on to our own. You've got the stuff in you, David. It's just that you've been raised wrong," Ellen said calmly.

Young and Handsome.

"Nothing would please me better than to have my raising re-edited by an expert like you!"

"O Ellen—no fooling—I not only want to do for myself, I want to do for you. I want to fix it so you can quit grubbing, so I can take care of you and make all the rest of your life easy for you. Honest, Sugar, I do love you! Can't you love me just a little?"

He was so young and handsome and altogether desirable that Ellen surprised herself by saying impulsively, "I already do."

"Ellen! If you already love me a little, I'll make you love me a lot. Please, Ellen, say you'll be engaged to me. I'll make you happy. I love you, Ellen."

She thoughtfully considered this. "What will your rich papa say about you're being engaged to a poor little stenographer?"

"I don't mind being engaged to you for a while—probationally—till I see how you pan out."

David wriggled his ring from his little finger and slipped it on Ellen's third one, where it was inclined to dangle. He hesitated a moment and then took her devoutly into his arms. His joy was made complete by the way Ellen returned his kisses.

"Come on! Let's go up and tell Pam."

"Good heavens!" she said. "Getting probationally engaged to David Barkley has almost made me forget why I asked him to meet me here."

Lists Close Shortly For Juvenile Chorus

Under the auspices of the Washington Schola Cantorum (Arturo Papalardo, director), a new group of boy and girl singers will be introduced in a concert during the Thanksgiving season. The winner of the Bobby Breen contest will be the soloist, and the concert will be a demonstration of what children between the ages of 8 and 13 can do in ensemble singing.

Enrollment of the chorus, at the Schola headquarters, 1317 F street northwest, will close on Saturday, and rehearsals will be held thereafter on Saturday afternoons. The program, which will be presented to invited guests, will include Max Reger's "Lullaby," Bach's "My Heart Ever Faithful," and compositions by Brahms and Dvorak.

Mrs. Page, Outsider, Wins U·S. Women's Golf Medal With 78

By the Associated Press.

Summit, N. J., Sept. 28.—Following in the footsteps of her celebrated fellow townsman, Tony Manero, who sprang a surprise by capturing the 1936 Open title, Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Greensboro, N. C., likewise staggered the dopesters today when she shot a course record-smashing 78 to win the qualifying medal in the United States women's golf championship.

The husky North Carolinian, who used to "just swing a club" until four years ago when she played her first full round and since then has won the North and South title once and the combined North and South Carolinias championship three times, toured the par 77 Canoe Brook Country Club layout in 40, 38, as she clipped 2 strokes off the former competitive standard. Only a 14-foot putt that ran over the final cup and stopped a few inches past denied her a par-equaling round.

She played in a stiff wind and over a course that was slow and heavy from rains during the past week. The 18-hole medal test, with 173 contestants for 64 berths in the first of six rounds of match play starting tomorrow to determine Glenna Collett Vare's successor, was completed without a casualty of either major or minor proportion.

With the 28-year-old Mrs. Page showing the way, all of the pre-tournament favorites came through in true style in what amounted to the fastest field the tournament has known since the qualifying quota was doubled to 64 two years ago. With 91 the limit, the low scoring was as surprising to the players as it was to the experts.

Owing to the size of the record field and darkness, the qualifying test was not completed. Nineteen players will finish their rounds tomorrow morning. When play was called, 55 players had scores of 90 or lower, and 14 were bracketed at 91—necessitating a play-off in the morning for the remaining nine places.

Mrs. Page, who learned her game from her father, Robert Lawson, a former pitcher with the Boston Braves and now a physical director at the University of North Carolina, matched par on 13 holes, scored two birdies and went one over par on each of three holes.

Runner-up shotmaking honors were shared by Patty Berg, the little 19-year-old ball of fire and nerves from Minneapolis, and Jean Kyer, of Ann Arbor, Mich., a "name golfer" in the Detroit district. They were bracketed with 80s.

Miss Dettweiler Has 87.

Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring, District, Maryland and Middle Atlantic champion, failed to make the grade with her 47-50—97. Other Washington scores were Elizabeth Houghton, Chevy Chase, 49-45—94; Mrs. Bishop Hill, Chevy Chase, 49-48—97, and Mrs. Landra B. Platt, 54-48—102.

Two other Washington golfers, Marion Brown and Mrs. L. G. Pray, both of Manor, were among 19 players unable to complete their rounds on account of darkness.

Miss Brown had 90 strokes for 16 holes, and hasn't a chance of qualifying, what with 91 the limit. Mrs. Pray, with 69 for 13 holes, must play the remaining holes in one over par in order to make the grade.

Miss Dettweiler's card:
Out ..... 554 356 374—42

Charlotte Glutting, of South Orange, N. J., who formerly held the course record at 80, and Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., were knotted for fourth place with 81s and then came Pamela Barton, youthful British champion; the veteran Mrs. Maureen Orcutt Crews and Mrs. Gregg Lifur, northern California titlist, grouped at 82.

In addition to Patty, Charlotte and Mrs. Crews, other members of America's international Curtis Cup team also fared well.

Dean Berates Cards, Praises Self, 3 Others

By the United Press.

Wichita, Kans., Sept. 28.—Jerome (Dizzy) Dean, who frequently and publicly has characterized himself as a true "major leaguer" today declared that his team, the St. Louis Cardinals, "isn't even fit to play in a bush league."

Still smarting from the loss of yesterday's closing game with the Chicago Cubs during which his teammates let in three runs on a single hit and glaring errors, Dean said that only four of the Cardinals were fit to play major league ball. These are Pepper Martin, Joe Medwick, Leo Durocher and, of course, Dean himself.

"The Cards can't hit for sour apples and their fielding is worse," Dean asserted. "I don't give a hang if they don't sign me up next year. I worked hard and did my share to win the pennant but how can you do it with a bush league club?"

With considerable modesty for him, Dean asserted that Carl Hubbell is "the best pitcher in the National League." Diz predicted that Hubbell will win two World Series games but doubted whether the Giants will win any more than that.

World Series Prophecies:

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 28.—World Series prophecies:

After dropping the opener the Yankees will then get their batting eyes back and hammer the Giants' pitchers until Hubbell comes back to the mound. If Hubbell pitches the fourth game the Yanks will win. If he gets three days' rest and does not start until the fifth game, Hubbell will win again.

If it rains any time after the first game and the schedule is interrupted, the Giants' chances will improve because Hubbell will get more rest between games. If the series goes seven games Hubbell will pitch in three games, but he won't win more than two.

No two starting pitchers will go the route in the same game after the opener. The Yanks' relief pitchers, Johnny Murphy, Pat Malone and Bump Hadley, will have plenty of work to do in the series and will acquit themselves nobly.

Joe DiMaggio, the Yanks' sensational rookie, will be hot and cold. He will make one of the greatest catches of the series in the outfield, but will be a sucker for Hubbell's screwball. He will hit the other Giant pitchers.

Lefty Gomez will start the second game for the Yanks, but he will lose control and have to be replaced, but the Yanks will win anyway, with the Bronx Bombers getting the range off Hal Schumacher, whose sinker won't fool the wise old boys like Lazzeri, Dickey and Gehrig.

Joe Moore will play the greatest all-round game for the Giants, robbing the Yanks of many hits, making great throws from the outfield, scoring more runs than any Giant and leading his team in batting.

Jake Powell will prove one of the Yanks' most valuable players, getting timely hits and proving a constant menace to the Giants in the field and at bat.

Lou Gehrig will hit two homers, one of which will prove the winning blow in one game. He won't get a hit off Hubbell in the first game, and will have his troubles in the field.

Sanford Is Rowing Coach at Cornell

Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 28 (AP).—Harrison Sanford, former Washington oarsman, today was named head rowing coach at Cornell, succeeding Jim Wray, who was dismissed after the Poughkeepsie regatta in June.

Sanford rowed under Tom Bolles, Rusty Callow and Al Ulbrickson at Washington, graduating in 1926. During his freshman year in 1923 he rowed at No. 7 and the Huskies lost only one race, that to Cornell. For several years after his graduation he was a member of the Washington Athletic Club crew.

Yanks, Giants In Workouts For Series

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 28.—The calmest spots in a baseball-mad New York today were the Polo Grounds and the Yankee Stadium, where the Giants and Yankees worked out on their home diamonds for the last time before they meet in the first game of the World Series Wednesday.

The two clubs will practice on rival fields tomorrow, with the Yankees getting their sights adjusted to the opening-game scenery at the Polo Grounds while the Giants take a workout in the Bronx Stadium.

These drills will complete preparations for a "subway series" that not only has the big town agog, after a 13-year interval in this rivalry, but which promises to shatter box-office records for baseball's championship affair.

The Yankees followed the Giants today in announcing a sellout of all reserved seats. This means more than half the capacity of each park already has been sold at the rate of $5.50 or $6.60 per ticket, for six games.

On the day of each game, 24,000 unreserved seats will be on sale at Polo Grounds, starting at 9 a. m., or 30,000 at the Yankee Stadium. The unreserved sections consist of grandstand space at $3.30 or bleachers at $1.10 each.

There were two new developments and countless rumors in the two camps today.

Bill Terry changed his batting order, moving Mel Ott, National League home-run champion, into the clean-up position in place of Center Fielder Jimmy Ripple. Ripple was moved to fifth, and will probably yield to Hank Leiber if the Yankees use a left-hander.

Manager Joe McCarthy promises to announce his starting pitcher tomorrow. Judging from today's workout, Vernon "Lefty" Gomez will get the call.

Gomez took a long workout with Catcher Bill Dickey and after the session said he thought he had more speed than at any time since he hurt his pitching arm in a game against the Indians early this season.

Monte Pearson, Yankee pitcher who injured his back last Thursday, spent most of this morning under the lights and then worked out for the first time since the injury. He reported to McCarthy that he still could not throw at full speed. The Yankee manager said he doubted that Pearson would pitch before Sunday, if then.

The most persistent rumor in the Giant's camp is that Hal Schumacher and not Freddy Fitzsimmons will pitch the second game for the National Leaguers. Terry said he thought that Schumacher was back in form but would not say definitely who would go to the mound Thursday.

Terry said that Hubbell definitely will pitch the opener. The southpaw ace hopes for warm weather.

Scalpers Are Haughty; Demand Block Purchase

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—World Series ticket scalpers were making the law of supply and demand pay high dividends today.

They were asking $20 for $5.50 tickets, demanding that you buy three at a time, and still not filling the demand.

Mechanical Trouble Ends Run; Abandons Efforts Until Next Year.

By the Associated Press.

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Sept. 28.—Ab Jenkins set eight new motor car speed and endurance records today—and then was forced by mechanical trouble to end a run he'd expected to bring a dozen more.

Jenkins, who captured most of the world's major marks in a 48-hour grind last week, sent his $40,000 racer away at 6:10:37 a. m., Pacific standard time (9:10:37 a. m., E. S. T.), seeking the records he missed last week.

The unexpected end of the projected 13-hour run came 51 miles after Jenkins smashed the 1,000-mile record of England's John Cobb, 156.85 miles per hour, with 165.73 M. P. H.

Records fell in rapid succession as the yellow racer thundered over a 12-mile circular course on this dry bed of an ancient salt sea 120 miles west of Salt Lake City.

Most generally coveted among drivers, the one-hour record was boosted by Jenkins to 170.9997 miles. The old mark, 167.69 miles, was set on the same course this summer by the London fur broker, Smiling John Cobb.

With Shirley Povich.

How they ever gonna beat Hubbell . . . mmm-mm-mmm, what a pitcher . . . they can send him against the Yankees in three games . . . and maybe he can save a fourth . . . ya cant 'bet against Hubbell . . . but how ya gonna bet against the Yankees? . . . they're murder up there at the plate . . . ya almost gotta string along with the old punch . . . Gehrig, Dickey, DiMaggio, Lazzeri, Rolfe . . . liable to bust one outa the lot any time . . . break up the ball game . . . one home run and the best-pitched ball game goes blooie . . . that's how the Yankees win 'em.

POVICH.

Yeah, but they ain't seen nothin' like Hubbell . . . he's poison, that's what . . . got the edge on every hitter with that dipsy-dew screwball . . . the pitcher, the good pitcher, always has the edge on the hitter . . . the good hitters didn't bother Walter Johnson much . . . he had too much stuff . . . so's Hubbell . . . pitchin's 75 per cent of a team's strength, ain't it? . . . but who's gonna stop the Yanks besides Hubbell . . . not Schumacher, they love that fast-ball stuff . . . not Gabler or Smith, they're dime-a-dozen guys . . . Fitzsimmons perhaps with his knuckler . . . yeah, Fitzsimmons'll beat 'em in one game, Hub'll beat 'em in three and it'll be all over.

Suppose Hubbell don't beat 'em . . . omigosh . . . who's gonna stop them Yanks . . . they'll mop up if they can get to Hubbell . . . they might mop up anyway . . . awful tough, those Yanks . . . both those parks are set-ups for 'em . . . rightfield at the Polo Grounds and at the stadium is just a chip shot for Gehrig and Dickey . . . Lazzeri and DiMaggio will be aiming for the leftfield seats . . . Mel Ott's the only slugger on the Giants whose worth a hoot outside of Terry, and Terry may not play with that trick knee of his'n.

What'll McCarthy do? . . . who's he gonna pitch against Hubbell in that first game? . . . 's he gonna figure he hasn't got a pitcher who can beat Hubbell and hold his best pitcher for the second game . . . whoever his best pitcher is? . . . but there's Gomez . . . the Yanks are swearing by him now . . . won his last five starts and is the old Goofy again . . . Gomez at his best can shut them Giants out . . . and Hubbell can't win without runs, can he? . . . yeah, that's what he oughta do . . . start Gomez against Hub and find out what's gonna happen right off the bat.

After Hub, what? . . . the Giants ain't got much besides old Fitz . . . but McCarthy can pour 'em in there . . . Monte Pearson, Charley Ruffing and Bump Hadley . . . that Hadley can do it if he's right and pitches against anybody but Hubbell . . . lucky guy, that Hadley . . . a no-account pitcher with the Nats last year . . . now a big shot with the Yankees . . . it only goes to show.

Say, that DiMaggio will be no soft touch for those Giants . . . don't care if he did flop in that All-Star game . . . a heluva ball player just the same . . . they'll have to pitch to him . . . and he's liable to park one up in the seats anytime . . . and they won't be getting gay with his throwing arm, either . . . he can go and get 'em for my dough . . . but ya can't underrate those Giants . . . came from 10½ games behind on July 4 to win the pennant going away . . . not the same old accordian Giants who folded in 1934 and '35 . . . a different team . . . the character of the team has changed . . . they're come-from-behinders . . . fight like hell.

They had to fight . . . never did give Hubbell or those other pitchers many runs to work with . . . always fighting for that tying run . . . extra innings and all that . . . my kind of a team . . . if you like that kind of a team the Giants are the kind of a team you like . . . Travis Jackson'll be in there flailing away with Ott and maybe Terry . . . they can hit a bit . . . a bit . . . can be dangerous.

But some $6,000-a-year guy will probably step in and get all the glory . . . 's World Series history . . . some guy won't be able to do anything wrong, will get the big hits in the clutches and turn in the great plays and they'll wonder how he ever was overlooked . . . who? I dunno . . . I gotta hunch though . . . strictly a hunch . . . watch Red Rolfe, the Yankees third sacker, he's the guy . . . don't say I didn't tell you.

Oh, well, I gotta get a bet down . . . lemme see, now . . . gotta string along with that Yankee punch . . . ya gotta . . . wait a minute, though . . . how ya gonna bet against Hubbell . . . don't be a fool . . . oh, me.

Milwaukee Routs Buffalo Again, 3-1

Milwaukee, Sept. 28 (AP).—Milwaukee's long-range hitters again were too much for the Buffalo Bisons tonight, the Brewers taking their third straight game in the Little World Series, 3 to 1, before an overflow crowd of 15,212.

Lanky Luke Hamlin held the Bisons to five hits and struck out nine men. Home runs by Laabs and Detore accounted for all the Milwaukee runs. Three of the Buffalo hits were infield scratch hits.

Most Valuable Are Gehrig, Hubbell

By the United Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 28.—Carl Hubbell, pitching ace of the New York Giants, and Lou Gehrig, durable first baseman of the New York Yankees, today were named the most valuable players in the major leagues in a poll conducted by the national baseball weekly, Sporting News.

It was the fourth time that Gehrig had been awarded the honor in the American League, and the second time that Hubbell had achieved the distinction in the National. Sporting News, which conducts an annual poll among a committee of baseball writers in the major league cities, previously had run up the Yankee first sacker's banner in 1927, 1931 and 1934, while Hubbell was named in 1933.

Hubbell's selection this year was the more popular of the two, he having collected 61 points for six first places, a second and a third, while Gehrig totaled 55 points for six top choices and one second.

Paul Waner, batting champion of the National League, was second to Hubbel with 35 points, and Earl Averill was second in the American with 48.

Three Washington players were mentioned for the honor, Joe Kuhel, Nats' first baseman, received 2 fourths, 1 fifth and 1 seventh, for a total of 16 points.

Washington Pitcher Jimmy DeShong received 1 third and 1 fourth, for a total of 11 points, and Outfielder Ben Chapman 1 sixth and 1 seventh, for a total of 5 points.

Dirtiest

By Jack Cuddy.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

New York, Sept. 28.—This is one of the "dirtiest" stories of the Olympics. Henry McLemore, well-known United Press writer, who is one of the last stragglers returning from the United States argosy abroad, tells the story. He tells it because he is afraid he might burn up his typewriter if he sat down to write it. You see—Henry loves horses.

McLemore scarcely had got the roll of the liner Roosevelt out of his stubby legs when I collared him and asked: "Well, how did you like it—the whole show over there in Germany?"

He said: "Well—it was all right, same as every Olympics. Some things were good and some were bad. But one thing nearly killed me. That was the equestrian business. Perhaps I shouldn't talk about it, it was that awful; it was so dirty."

I said that was exactly what we wanted to hear, the awful and dirty business. So he gave off the following story:

It seems that they had three days of Olympic equestrian or horsemanship competition—right near the Olympic village. They were competing for the grand military prize. The first day is confined to semi-dressage, making the horse obey the rider—riding him to an obstacle and making him halt stock still without moving a muscle, like a good bird dog pointing. The second day involves a difficult 22-mile run through the woods over obstacles, and the third day includes a lot of jumps.

McLemore bore down on that second day's run—22 miles according to maps which are handed the riders. No one is supposed to know the course, except the officials who laid it out. It is supposed to represent an officer carrying a message through strange territory in time of war. McLemore emphasized that each rider could use only one horse during the three days of competition.

Shansi's Bid Near Finish Is Futile

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 28.—Mrs. E. Denemark made a quick return on a claiming investment here today. Last Saturday she placed her certified check for $6,500 in the claiming box and after Two Bab had "also ran" in the colors of the C. V. Whitney Stable, the filly was led off to the Denemark barn.

With Jockey Jackie Westrope in her saddle, Two Bob brought a winning share of $700 to Mrs. Denemark in winning the Grade C Handicap, feature of the program today. The daughter of The Porter was urged to the finish line a half-length in advance of O. Blank's Shansi, with the Glen Riddle Farm's War Emblem third and three lengths back.

The crowd of 8,000 had a strong regard for Two Bob's chances for the filly went postward the favorite to bring a $4.90 mutuel while running the mile and a sixteenth in 1:48 1-5 over a fast track.

The daily double returned a $123.80 mutuel to those who backed the combination of Offender and Sir Kai. This duo was the favorite after Offender had won the day's opener and the "possible pay-offs" ranged upward to $1,940.30 on Nature's Dream in the third race.

In the feature, Shansi and Conquer struggled for the early lead as Two Bob sought to find her racing legs in the rear of the field. Shansi dropped back leaving the far turn and Conquer opened a gap. Two Bob was asked for speed and responded. Westrope took the overland route and the filly took command with an eighth to go. However, Shansi came again and under a terrific drive was gaining steadily on the former Whitneyite.

One of the closest finishes of the meeting was in the first race. The camera had to be called upon to assist the judges in separating Mrs. E. Denemark's Offender and A. Pelleteri's Reckless. After some deliberation they awarded the victory to Offender, a $31.80 shot. Virnock was third a length in back of the gallant struggle. The rivals came out of the pack in the early stretch to fight it out to the wire. The winner's time for the six furlongs was 1:14 2-5.

The first disqualification of the meeting resulted in the second. E. M. Pike's Kenty, ridden by Jockey L. Balaski, was the victim of the ruling. A. Frost's Yenrac was moved into the winner's position, with second and third money going to Teedy the Bold and Army and Navy. Kenty, breaking from the outside, cut across his field, and in doing so bumped Kimpton, which, in turn, swerved over on Canard. Yenrac's backers collected an $8.50 mutuel. Kenty ran the three-quarter-mile sprint in 1:14 1-5. Sir Kai, a son of Mai-Sang, running in the interests of Mrs. M. Eslick, took the day's second camera finish in the third race in a duel with She Knows, the property of Mrs. W. E. Martin. Shyno was third in the field of 11.

Sir Kai was well back in the field as She Knows had a good lead entering the stretch. In the final drive, Sir Kai, ridden by Apprentice E. Lebanc, came to the outside and hooked up in a struggle with She Knows at the sixteenth pole that lasted to the end. Sir Kai paid a $13.80 mutuel and ran the 6 furlongs in 1:14. She Knows was an odds-on favorite.

The Glen Riddle Farm Warrior Queen made every post a winning one in the fourth race, a 5½-furlong dash for fillies. With Jockey J. Lynch doing the saddle work, the daughter of American Flag led Morning to the wire by three parts of a length, with Phlox third and three lengths away. The winner, paired with The Drum in the betting, brought a return of $6.50 and was clocked in 1:08.

Balaski Suspended.

T. Malone's Inferno Lad made it two victories in four starts at the meeting and brought Jockey Jackie Westrope a riding "triple" for the day by winning the sixth race over the 1 1-16-mile course. The veteran Dunlin gelding held a good position from the start and developed a stretch run that Easiest Way could not resist. The well-beaten third was Crowded Hours. The winner paid $11.10 and was timed in 1:47 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OFFENDER, $31.80, $9.00, $5.40; RECKLESS, $3.20, $2.60; VIRNOCK, $5.30.

OFFENDER, saving ground when shuffled back at the break, circled horses for the final drive and, under vigorous handling, was up in the concluding strides. RECKLESS, within striking distance of the leaders from the beginning, wore down TOOTHPICK to take command midway of the stretch and just missed while tiring. VIRNOCK was rushed into contention going to the first turn and continued gamely, but was unable to resist the other two. TOOTHPICK gained the lead when SALLY QUICK stopped, but faltered badly in the closing eighth. CHERRY ORCHARD was crowded back at the break and made up some ground.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:50. Off at 2:54. Winner, A. Frost's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—YENRAC, $8.60, $3.40, $3.20; TEDDY THE BOLD, $3.80, $3.10; ARMY AND NAVY, $7.50.

KENTY, off in the first division, was steadied along while running on the outside, forged to the front swinging for the stretch and had to be kept under pressure to the end. KENTY was disqualified for cutting across the field. YENRAC was rushed into contention from a slow beginning and came willingly in the final stages. TEDDY THE BOLD hung after gaining sharply leaving the backstretch. ARMY AND NAVY showed a good effort. KIMPTON suffered interference and stopped. CANARD also was bothered.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:26½. Off at 3:30. Winner, Mrs. M. Eslick's ch. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SIR KAI, $13.80, $5.30, $3.90; SHE KNOWS, $2.90, $2.40; SHYNO, $4.90.

SIR KAI began gaining approaching the stretch, was sent to the outside for the stretch run, engaged SHE KNOWS in the closing sixteenth and withstood a drive to be up at the end. SHE KNOWS, first away, was steadied along while setting the pace, responded willingly to pressure in the late stages and barely failed to last. SHYNO, forwardly placed throughout, hung in the last furlong. JAKOVIA dropped back at the far turn and then gained slowly. MISS TIPTOE closed with a rush on the outside.

FOURTH RACE—Five and a half furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Glen Burnie. For 2-year-old fillies. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:00½. Off at 4:06. †Glen Riddle Farm entry.
Two-dollar mutuels paid—WARRIOR QUEEN, $6.50, $3.10, $2.60; MORNING, $3.20, $2.40; PHLOX, $4.80.

WARRIOR QUEEN, first away, opened a good lead swinging from the backstretch, was shaken up in the early stretch run and was kept to a stout drive to hold MORNING safe. The latter came through on the inside to challenge WARRIOR QUEEN in the stretch, but hung in the final 20 yards. PHLOX gained steadily throughout the running. SWIFTFLY tired after being within striking distance throughout. SWEET DESIRE came with a rush after lacking early speed.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; handicap. Grace C. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:36. Off at 4:38. Winner, Mrs. E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TWO BOB, $4.90, $3.40, $2.30; SHANSI, $7.30, $3.80; WAR EMBLEM, $2.90.

TWO BOB, allowed to settle into her best stride, circled her field entering the stretch to take command, but had to be kept under pressure to withstand the late rush of SHANSI. The latter rushed to the front entering the backstretch, dropped back in the stretch and then came with good speed in the final drive but was wearing the winner down. WAR EMBLEM raced forwardly, but tired in the stretch and appeared to be short. CONQUER was used up getting to the front and setting the pace. BRIGHT EMERALD went evenly.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:00. Off at 5:03. Winner, T. Two-dollar mutuels paid—INFERNO LAD, $11.10, $5.20, $2.90; EASIEST WAY, $4.10, $2.70; CROWDED HOURS, $2.90.

INFERNO LAD, within striking distance of the leaders from the beginning, gained sharply when put to a drive after 5 furlongs and, under stout handling, was opening a gap at the finish. EASIEST WAY came up with a rush along the backstretch, raced SNOBBY SCAMP into defeat, but could not resist the winner. CROWDED HOURS, forced wide at the first turn, tired along after gaining a forward position. SNOBBY SCAMP shook off INDIAN NEWS to take command, but faltered from rushing tactics. INDIAN NEWS was used up setting and forcing the pace.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:41. Off at 5:42. Winner, Mrs. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PEPPERY, $26.30, $13.20, $6.90; NO MISTAKE, $11.80, $7.60; MORE PEP, $5.70.

PEPPERY, forwardly placed from the start, circled the leaders to take command leaving the backstretch, shook off a challenge of DUNAIR in the early stretch and had to be kept to a drive to withstand the closing effort of NO MISTAKE. The latter, close up going to the first turn, was blocked when attempting to go through on the inside, rallied sharply when clear and was wearing down the winner at the end. MORE PEP, under restraint to the far turn, came with good courage on the inside in the final drive. SPARTAN LADY could not find racing room in midstretch and closed willingly. DUNAIR tired after threatening in the final drive. MANUAL tired after setting the early pace.

Time Out!

By Chet Smith

"Did you happen to see anything of a trombone?"

Out Fishin'

by Jack Hawley

During September and October anglers have in past years enjoyed the two best fishing months of the year. The present month has been the worst yet recorded with the possible exception of 1933, which was attributed to the hurricane. Anglers are plainly worried over the present deplorable fishing situation. Hundreds of telephone calls this past week sent us on a hurried trip down the Chesapeake and along its tributaries interviewing boatmen, commercial netters, etc., in a vain attempt to solve the mystery of why the fish will not, with few exceptions, accept live bait or artificial lures in the manner accustomed with rod or hand line.

Boatmen agree that there is no scarcity of game fish such as rock, trout and bluefish. Commercial netters (legal) are of the same opinion out when asked why their nets were setting on the tops of the poles instead of in the water replied "too much small live bait fill our nets crowding out the other marketable fish. The time required to handle the nets for the smaller fish is too expensive and until the 'trash' has disappeared we will have do as the anglers are doing—sit and wait for better fishing conditions."

The consensus of opinion is this: Fishing will remain at a standstill just so long as the waters are filled with live bait. When cooler weather arrives these small fish will disappear and for a short time we will have excellent game fishing. We'll keep you informed as closely as possible as the migration time is rapidly approaching for all fish, with the exception of the rock fish (striped bass) who crave the cold water.

Shiners the Culprits.

Menhaden are not, as is generally believed to be, the food on which the blues are feeding on. If such was the case we believe our present take of blue would be much higher. The real offender is a small fish about 2 inches long, commonly called shiner or silver side. This little fellow travels in enormous schools (millions of them) below the surface of the water, seldom coming to the surface except when pursued by game fish, when he will actually fly several feet in his efforts to escape his pursuer.

Recently we examined the stomach contents of 13 very large bluefish caught off Point No Point. Each stomach was entirely devoid of food although at the time the fish were being landed a large quantity of these small bait fish were disgorged in a last attempt to throw the hook. From all indications the bluefish are traveling in very small schools, going from one feeding ground to another, returning to the channels after early morning and late evening feeding.

Trolling for bluefish when they are pursuing small bait fish will prove satisfactory, providing the angler trolls fast (7 to 8 miles per hour), because the artificial lure must be traveling at the same rate of speed as the live bait, otherwise it ceases to be an attraction. Slow trolling is recommended when fish are not "showing" or when bait is scarce.

Our last successful trip on September 17 proved the above statement. Not a fish was caught on slow-moving bait. Thirteen were landed on fast-moving bait. Rock fish are biting at several places, notably off Tall Timbers (trolling) in deep water, but the catches are not running over four or five to the boat. A few stripers were taken this past week.

Oakwood Lodge is remaining open until November 1 to care for the rock fishing fraternity. At the mouth of St. Jeromes Creek and to the right and left, close to shore, will be found some good rock fishing grounds. November will be better, as the big ones move into these waters and along the bar nearby.

Catches yesterday off Cove and Cedar Points (Solomons Island) were fairly good. Some large catches of pan-sized rock, 2-pound trout and a few blues were taken. Remember to take plenty of bloodworms on your next trip, as they cannot be purchased out of the city. Get your peeler crabs here also—best for all kinds of still fishing. Fishing on the Middles is at a standstill; the channel bass that were there last week have moved on.

Investigation Defeats Miller, 2 to 1, for Post Weekday Title

Pepco Barry Is Big Gun In Victory

By John R. Vosburgh.

A detachment of Federal agents rubbed out the Miller Furniture ball club in full view of 3,000 spectators yesterday afternoon on the South Ellipse to give Bureau of Investigation the city week-day championship of The Post Sandlot Association by a squeaky 2-to-1 margin.

To say that the G-men ascended to the title in squeaky fashion is putting it mildly. The Millermen had the Federal boys on the spot so often that it looked as though only a team composed entirely of Dick Tracys and Pat Pattons could pull through, but pull through they did after quelling all doubts as to their championship status.

Their victory marked the third straight year that United States Government League teams have won the week-day title, NRA winning in 1934 and 1935. It was also Investigation's fifth win in five series starts and the second time that it has set back the Industrial League champions. In their first series encounter, the Millermen absorbed a 7-2 beating.

Barry Is Hero.

Investigation owes its championship to a number of causes, including some superb relief pitching by Ray Davidson, a searing triple to right center by Pepco Barry, who drove in one of the G-men runs and scored the other, and a bullseye throw by Ed Colliflower from left-field, which cut off the Millers' tying run at the plate.

Both teams did all their scoring in the first inning. Willis Fisher, Investigation lead-off man, drew a walk from Lefty Stevens and took second on Walter Morris' bunt. Barry then drove out his three-base contribution and scored when Eddie Cinotti messed up the relay from Centerfielder Sugrue. The G-men went on to fill the bases on two walks and an error, but with two out, Herman Xander flied out to end the threat.

The Millermen came back in the same frame with Tommy Nolan leading off by getting hit on the arm by a pitched ball from Dick Nichols, F. B. I. speedball merchant. Cinotti fanned, but Lyman McAboy and Fred Wahler singled to left and center, respectively, and Nolan scored for the first and last Furniture run.

Nichols Relieved.

The Industrial champs had their big chance in the fifth, but Davidson, former Central High southpaw, relieved Nichols in the nick of time to fan Stevens with the bases full for the third out. Gabby Henry Gichner led off the rally by laying down a bunt and taking first on a close play when Leverton's throw drew First Baseman Goof Taylor off the bag.

Tommy Nolan advanced him with a bunt and Cinotti walked, but Gichner was caught on the next play trying to score from second on McAboy's single to left which Colliflower whipped to the plate to catch the slow Miller catcher by a wide margin. Nichols walked Wahler, and Manager Clayton Sheedy called in Davidson and then sat back and watched him fan Stevens.

Anacostia Masons Play Donkey Game

With Arthur Godfrey scheduled to engage in a pitching duel with himself for both teams, the Anacostia League of Masons will meet the Anacostia Lions Club in a game of donkey baseball which will present an original line-up of titled helpers, holders and players, designated as anything from hoof hoister and tail twister to howl halter, tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium.

The line-up of each team, which under the new arrangement numbers 48 participants, will feature prominent Anacostia physicians, clergymen and businessmen, some of whom will serve as bone rubbers, some as donkey pacifiers and some as donkey bushers. A few will play ball.

Tickets will be on sale at the gate. 25 cents for children and 15 cents for adults. Proceeds, after necessary deductions for liniment, will go to charities supported by both organizations.

2 Philly Writers Picked Both Yanks and Giants

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Both of the Philadelphia teams finished last in the major baseball league pennant races, but two of the experts from the Quaker city topped the list of nearly 100 sports writers that participated in the pre-season poll conducted by the Associated Press.

Jack Fried, of the Evening Bulletin, and William Wolf, of the Record, were the only writers that picked both the Giants and the Yankees.

Intramural Tennis to Kain.

Eugene Kain, of Merchantville, N. J., defeated Hugh Duffy, of New York, in the finals of the Georgetown intramural tennis tournament. The scores were 6—4, 6—2, 6—2.

Meade's Work At Maryland Pleasing

Bubbling over with enthusiasm after "Jumbo Jim" Meade's aggressive performance against St. John's in Saturday's opening game, Coach Frank Dobson last night said the former Tome Institute star will be given Bill Guckeyson's halfback position in Maryland's regular backfield pending further developments.

Dobson expressed satisfaction with every phase of Meade's work, although the boy's lack of experience was glaringly in evidence several times. The wiry Terp tutor is confident that he will develop into an exceptionally fine back before many games are on the books.

Two other surprises Dobson experienced Saturday were contributed by Nick Budkoff, a big and rugged end who was shifted to tackle at the last minute, and Fred Hewitt, youngster from Baltimore Poly, who plays a halfback. Budkoff looks like a real tackle and it will not be surprising if he takes over "Turk" Birkland's position, but Hewitt will have to string along as a second-stringer until some of the older boys graduate.

McLemore Tells Of Olympic 'Dirt'

were permitted to ask questions about the various obstacles on that second day's run. And all asked particularly about the first jump. McLemore figured that first jump was about 9 or 10 miles from the start—just about the place, when horse and rider were beginning to tire a bit. They asked the German officials and they checked with any friends among the German army officers they might have had. They were told, particularly the Americans, that the first obstacle involved a concealed water jump. The horse must take off over a stone wall and land on the far edge of the brook, in water "no more than 4 feet deep."

Four feet deep water isn't bad for those contest horses to land in because only the legs of the horse get wet, and he can scramble out in a hurry. So—the obstacle was not regarded as very dangerous.

In the field of 56 riders, including a team of three Americans, they all took this jump and every one landed in "10 feet of water." Both horses and men went completely out of sight. McLemore says there are plenty of movies to show this.

Virtually every foreign rider was washed off his mount, and lost valuable time in regaining the saddle and getting his horse out of the water hole. Worst of all—every one of those horses and riders suffered the handicap of picking up about 15 pounds of water weight. Uniforms, saddles and blankets got soaked. But the three Germans and their mounts did not get wet.

"Capt. Rags Raguse was mounted on a very fine black horse, the very best in all the Army's stables. It takes about four years to develop an Army horse like this. Capt. Raguse and his horse soared over the wall and plumped into this secret pool. The captain's fine horse broke his leg in the tumble, and the captain, as an act of mercy, was forced to shoot his mount. Had to kill his horse right then and there. Tears trickled down the captain's water-drenched face. It was a pathetic sight."

"How did the German riders escape the pool?" McLemore continued. "Well, apparently they had been well aware of its layout in advance, because all three Germans jumped their horses to the extreme left on the wall and landed in about 3 feet of water on an artificial sand bar.

"Moreover, another queer thing about the German victory was that the victor was weighed in at the end of the 22 miles without any judges to check his weight. Every entrant was officially compelled to scale at least 165 pounds. When Thompson finished he weighed 183, counting his water-soaked clothing, etc., but the German winners stepped on the scales and the American Army officers present at the time will attest he barely tipped the scales at 161.

He simply laughed off his weight, and later took first prize. The Americans did not protest because they thought it would be unsportsmanlike, and they admitted that the German winner had ridden a magnificent race, anyway. But the Americans never got over shooting that fine horse."

Superstition Has Innings At Hilltop

Jack Hagerty is a football coach by profession and isn't superstitious as a rule. Black cats, broken mirrors and cross-eyed seamen hold no terror for him. This week, however, the head man of Georgetown's football forces is weakening and walking around with fingers crossed and rabbit feet peaking from his hip pocket.

Hagerty has good reason to be a little worried as his new and shiny football machine gets up steam for Saturday's inaugural with Delaware, for the enemy is coached by Lyal W. Clarke, a product of Dick Harlow's regime at Western Maryland.

The Terrors, if you recall, have enjoyed signal success against Georgetown since their first meeting in 1929, when Western Maryland, scheduled as a warmer-upper, flattened the District eleven, 7-0. Since then Georgetown has won but one game in seven.

Then, too, Georgetown remembers last season when a smart and aggressive Albright eleven, which eventually met defeat only once during the entire season, defeated it by a touchdown in the curtain-raiser. That back, what was his name, Ripple? Yes, Ripple, ran the harassed Hoyas ragged and finally ran them into defeat in one of the season's biggest surprises. Hagerty doesn't want a repetition of that this Saturday.

Delaware, it appears, not only has a capable coach but an abundance of material to be coached, including two ponderous tackles, Olaf Drozdov, 200-pounds, and Charley Schwartz, 210. Louis (Rube) Hayman, former Central High School star, is a reserve on the squad and probably will see service against Georgetown. Delaware's line averages 183 pounds and the backfield about 180. This will be the first game between the schools since 1919 when Georgetown won by the murderous figgers of 47-0.

Sokolis, Penn Grid Ace, Wrestles Here

Stan Sokolis, former University of Pennsylvania football, track and basketball star, will make his wrestling debut here in a 30-minute preliminary to the Rudy Dusek-Hans Kampfer burping bout at Turner's Arena next Thursday night. Stan, who won seven or eight letters at Penn, will grapple with one Harry Finkelstein, also a newcomer hereabouts.

Wild George Koverly will make passes at Cliff Olson in a semifinal which has been curtailed from the regular 45-minute limit to 30 minutes because the one fall to a finish main event is expected to go overtime.

Grid Games Wanted.

Gallagher to Stop Everett, Prediction of Natie Brown

"Gallagher will murder that fellow," averred Nathan, whom Gallagher never could beat but who was twice subdued by Everett. "If his showing today in the Humidor Gymnasium is any indication of his condition, then I say the fight won't go over seven rounds."

"Buck has been laying off two days," explained Erwin. "For these 15-round fights, it is necessary to have your fighter in good physical shape about a week before ring time, then let him rest and build up strength, but keep his edge."

"There is nothing wrong with Buck's physical condition, it is his timing that was off yesterday—and that because of the two-day layoff. Don't worry about his timing when he gets in the ring. That will all be taken care of in the next week."

Sarron was on hand at the workout, showing Everett a few things about balance and how to reach Gallagher with a right-hand uppercut to the chin.

"This is one of the best punches Everett has," explained the feather champion. "But he doesn't use it often enough. He is a real knockout artist when he throws that one—and most opponents are not expecting it because uppercutting is practically a lost art in the ring today."

Gallagher, already rounding into top condition, did not work yesterday.

The colored fight show, to be the first indoor boxing card of the season, will be hled at Turner's Arena next Friday night, instead of next Monday night as was previously announced.

The same double-windup and supporting card as previously announced will comprise the bill.

In the twin features, Billy Eley will tangle with Lambertine Williams and Tiger Sullivan will oppose Joe Tinsley.

In six-round supporting bouts, Sammy Williams will engage Prince Albert, and Kid Kriss will make passes at Kid Howie.

Orange Bowl Flag to Wave Saturday

There's going to be a lot of boisterous flag-waving out Brookland way Saturday afternoon when Catholic University's Orange Bowl champions put on their new suits and step out for an afternoon of fun, frivolity and football against a visiting delegation from little Shenandoah College. Only one flag will be waved, however, and that by a group of dignified men old enough to know better, not a crowd of youngsters, as you might suspect.

But the dignified committee can be excused this time for they have been invited to raise the Cardinals' Orange Bowl pennant to the halyards as part of the opening ceremonies preceding the ball game. Maj. Ernest W. Brown, chief of police, heads the committee which includes Alvin Hall, director of the Bureau of Engraving; Isaac Gans, member of the A. B. C. Board and prominent civic worker; Joe Judge, former Washintgon baseball star; Edward Meehan, Frank B. Davis and Jerald D. Grosner.

Mike Durso, the perennial freshman and cheer leader, will be there, too; in fact he is the one who got the flag-waving or raising committee together.

Maj. Brown will be accompanied by one of his pet prides, the Washington Police Boys Club Band, a 70-piece aggregation of tuneful musicians who have won a place high in District musical circles since their organization. The boys will help Catholic University's band enliven the afternoon's festivities.

Twenty-five hundred CCC boys also will be the university's guests for the inaugural. They hail from camps located in nearby Maryland and Virginia, 15 in all.

Al Jamison Shoots 66 Over Kenwood Course

Al Jamison, assistant professional at Kenwood Golf and Country Club, shot a blistering 66, five under par, yesterday at his home course, while playing with Congressman Numa Montet and Andrew Bain.

Reeling off one of the lowest scores made at the Kenwood course this season, Jamison racked up five birdies and an eagle, taking the first nine apart in 31 blows. A five on the home hole prevented him from scoring a 65.

D. C. All-Stars Scrimmage For Giants

Working briskly and in a business-like manner, the College All-Stars last night finished the heaviest part of their practice program in preparation for Thursday night's game with the New York Giants at Griffith Stadium. The drill lasted two hours and was climaxed by a strenuous 45-minute scrimmage.

Joe Meglen, hard-running co-captain of last season's Georgetown eleven, was the outstanding back in action, going through the line for several substantial gains and punting with the old skill and power that made him a top-notch favorite in New York last year. Meglen, now a member of the Patterson Panthers, of the American League, will be one of the All-Stars' big guns.

Brush Up for Game.

Tonight and tomorrow night will be devoted to light work as Coach Ted Wright puts the squad of 20 men through a final dress rehearsal of their plays. Wright is optimistic about the team's chances of giving the Giants a close battle if his boys don't pull an upset.

The All-Stars, incidentally, will at least be as big as the Eastern pro champions. The New Yorkers average 212 pounds, with the tackles reaching 230 pounds and most of the weight concentrated in the middle of the line. The Collegians, however, will average 216 pounds from wing to wing, and 196 in the backfield. New York's backfield averages 196.

While the Giants boast a strong running attack, built around "Kink" Richards, Max (Bananas) Krause, Bob Dunlap and Tony Sarausky, they probably will show to better advantage through their aerial game, one of the best in the National League. Ed Danowski, former Fordham captain and All-American selection, usually throws the ball and last season completed more than half of his passes for a total gain of 795 yards.

Five Elevens Available For 150-Pound League

With five clubs already members, the National City 150-Pound Class Football League is preparing for a banner season. A meeting will be held at 8 p. m. tomorrow at the Atlas Sport Shop, 927 D street, when the final deadline will arrive for payment of franchises. Vacancies exist for only one or two more teams.

Members of the league this year will include Northeast Boys Club, which played as the American Beer team last year; Palace A. C., Georgetown Boys Club, Cardinals and Ballston, Va.

Wheat Prices Off 2¾c as Exports Drop

Rains in Argentina and Australia Also a Bearish Factor.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 28.—Disappointing dearth of export business at Winnipeg, together with 3⅝ cents a bushel break in Liverpool quotations, tumbled Chicago wheat futures downward 2¾ cents today. Eastern and Southwestern houses were persistent sellers in the wheat market here. Chaotic conditions regarding European exchange had a decidedly unsettling effect.

Reports of general rains in Argentina and of beneficial moisture also in parts of Australia, as well as over domestic winter wheat territory Southwest, were a handicap to friends of higher wheat prices.

Class I Rail Net Up 52% in Year

Advance reports from 103 Class 1 railroads, representing 84.3 per cent of total operating revenues, made public yesterday by the Association of American Railroads, show that those roads in August had a net railway operating income of $56,090,777 compared with $36,833,008 in the same month last year, or over 52 per cent. Operating revenues of the 103 Class 1 railroads in August totaled $296,322,252 compared with $247,918,064, in August, last year, or an increase of 19.5 per cent.

Operating expenses of the same roads in August, this year, totaled $207,134,356 compared with $186,285,709 in August, last year, or an increase of 11.2 per cent.

Taxes paid in August by the 103 railroads amounted to $24,285,340 compared with $17,362,068 in August, 1935, or an increase of 39.2 per cent.

Rules Hamper Stock Market, Gay Declares

New York, Sept. 28.—A study of stock market statistics over the past year leads to the conclusion that the market, through restrictions placed upon it by governmental regulations, has suffered impairment of its normal functions and has become less liquid, the annual report of the New York Stock Exchange, prepared under the direction of President Charles R. Gay, maintains. The market has become thin and illiquid, and in addition there now are obstacles against purchases and sales of securities in any large quantities, according to the report. The report was placed in the hands of members today.

Supporting the contention that markets have been rendered less liquid by outside regulation, the exchange report includes a study showing that the average "spread" in closing quotations for 200 most active stocks on May 13, 1936, was $0.373, compared with $0.276 on May 15, 1935. The exchange's study indicates that spreads between bids and offers have been widened substantially and that the specialist's books in most instances no longer carry limit orders in amounts sufficient to provide a normal market with adequate support or supply.

Causes of Thinner Markets.

Some of the underlying causes of thinner markets are outlined in the report as the reluctance of large traders to make commitments and the restrictive effects of the high stock transfer and capital gains taxes. Comparative share volume has fallen off and the quality of the market has been affected adversely, it is maintained.

President Gay in his letter accompanying the annual report throws considerable light on the more liberal public relations policy of the exchange since his induction into office in the spring of 1935. There is an inescapable obligation to keep the public informed about the functions and operatoins of the Nation's primary securities exchange, he asserts, as some 15,000,000 security holders and owners of 100,000,000 savings bank accounts and insurance policies, who are indirect owners, depend upon an efficient market which will properly furnish an evaluation of their property and interests.

Gulf States Steel To Expand Plants

Gadsden, Ala., Sept. 28 (AP).—L. E. Geohegan, general manager of the Gulf States Steel Co., said today the company planned to spend approximately $2,000,000 on additional plants and facilities in Gadsden.

Work will begin as soon as financing plans are approved by the Federal Securities Commission, Geohegan said. The manager did not give details of the improvements.

The Market By Carlton A. Shively

A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Maintain Firm Tone With Motor Shares Gaining Popularity; Wheat Lower.

New York, Sept. 28.—Stocks proceeded without much conviction either way, although the good tone displayed and the nature of the advances, which were sharp in some places, suggested that traders expected the chances favored higher prices for the speculative section, most likely to be affected by inflation. Government bonds continued their lower trend. Turnover in stocks was about the same as that of recent days, around 1,500,000 shares. December wheat dropped 1¾ cents to 113½ cents a bushel.

Second-day thoughts on and observations of the first repercussions on markets of French currency devaluation and abandonment of the gold standard, appeared to be reassuring to Wall Street. Most markets maintained a firm tone, a condition which was supported by an appreciation of the fact that, regardless of long-term tendencies in the money and securities markets, no great change is likely to take place immediately.

Can Spare the Loss.

French withdrawals of funds from this market, in so far as the funds are under the control of their present owners, will take place only when it appears more profitable to send them somewhere else. Most of the French bank money sent has not gone into our stock market. It has been invested in short-term obligations and its withdrawal will affect only the money market. Were money tight enough for any diminution of the supply to be reflected in calling of stock market loans, and consequently in liquidation of stocks, the story would be different.

Actually, the case is that our money market is giving little assistance to the stock market, and that, furthermore, it has a great superabundance of funds. Extensive withdrawals and exports of gold scarcely would tighten money. The mere spectacle of gold exports frequently has a restraining effect on securities markets, but virtually no adverse effect was caused when last month the Federal Reserve Board deliberately ordered the banks to draw nearly $2,000,000,000 from the money market and place it in reserves.

Profit Motive.

French money sent here to escape devaluation probably could be employed more profitably in France, in so far as it is short-term bank funds, and may be expected to return there. Two factors must be considered: one is the fear of confiscation, which may keep it on this side so long as possible. Another is the carrying out of the Socialist program of complete nationalization of the French banks. If that program be carried out, and the first steps have been taken, the banks naturally would be compelled to repatriate their funds. For that matter, French citizens also might find it difficult to keep their money abroad.

Privately owned funds will nevertheless probably stay here until (1) more reassurance can be had with regard to the political future of France, and (2) until the owners think withdrawal will be profitable, purely from an investment or speculative standpoint.

Bright Prospects.

Meanwhile, the stock market has two engaging prospects before it: One is the hope for expanding trade based on stabilized currencies and the other is the currency depreciation pet, for it is by no means certain that this country will not increase its offering of dollars abroad, and publicity to that sort of thing is bound to renew hopes among speculators that, because constant dripping wears a stone, in the end confidence in dollars may be destroyed.

Just why this country should be placed in a heroic role on the weekend currency transaction whereby we exchanged $5,000,000 in our money for an equivalent amount of British pounds, when the price of the latter was falling rapidly in relation to the dollar is one of those mysteries which the propagandists are so fond of presenting to the American public. We have been dumping dollars in exchange for useless silver, for gold to be buried in Kentucky caverns, and for foreign currency for the past three years. We deliberately cut the gold value of the dollar on the excuse that it would help our trade position.

Bearish on Dollars.

Secretary Morgenthau has done nothing more than do what he has been doing all along, and a deal involving $5,000,000 scarcely deserved so much public notice. He may yet succeed, if he uses the whole stabilization fund, in really putting the dollar down. Great Britain meanwhile must have murmured something about the Yankees, in spite of surface indications of gratitude for a service—i. e., doing something to keep the pound from falling down to or below its old value vis-a-vis the dollar. If the Russians were dumping pounds they may have annoyed us, but they scarcely upset British equilibrium; and even from the standpoint of those who wish to see the dollar maintained at a low figure in terms of sterling the Russian transaction was too small to have any significance beyond a desire for publicity.

Thin Markets.

In the annual report of the president of the stock exchange an interesting reference is made to the thin markets which, according to President Gay, have come about partly because of new regulations and the restrictive effects of the high stock transfer and capital gains taxes. Most people may agree with President Gay that a thin market works a hardship on many people and hurts capital distribution. They also will agree that "complete statistical proof of market quality probably may never be obtained." However, it is unfortunate that the stock exchange's economic advisers were not able to prepare a better statistical support for their position than that given in the annual report of the president. They have presented as proof the rather odd comparison of a single day in 1935 (May 15), which will tend to rouse up some doubting Thomases. The comparison shows a greater number of spreads at large fractions this year as compared with a year ago, but suppose, for example, the comparison had been made with some of those boisterous days in 1929, when the old system was in full working order, but when nevertheless spreads rarely stopped at fractions!

3-Nation Money Pact Pleases Local Bankers

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Local bankers are expressing gratification at the news of the agreement reached between the governments of France, Great Britain and the United States to effect currency stabilization. It is expected that it will greatly improve trade relations between these countries and, especially, France, whose past maintenance of the gold standard has retarded world trade recovery.

The views expressed by bank officials here indicate that the move means more to them than mere business improvement but rather that it will block monetary wars and measurably insure world peace. It has accomplished, they say, what the World Monetary and Economic Conference in 1933 failed to effect.

One prominent banker quoted with approval the statement of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau that "stability of world currencies has to be built first before we could look forward to lasting peace and real recovery in world trade."

Underwriters' Luncheon.

The first luncheon meeting of the District of Columbia Life Underwriters Association for the 1936-1937 season was held in the small ballroom of the Willard Hotel yesterday and was addressed by Grant Taggart, ace salesman, and agent for the California-Western States Life Insurance Co., at Cowley, Wyo., a town of 800 population.

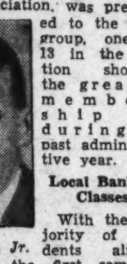
Twenty-two years ago, Mr. Taggart entered the business with his company at the age of 18. Since that time, he has written $14,000,000 of insurance on the lives of approximately 4,000 persons. This phenomenal record had its foundation in Cowley and the surrounding territory within a radius of 50 square miles with a population of only 12,000. More remarkable, in his achievement, is the fact that this volume was not made up of large policies. Mr. Taggart writes on an average about 200 lives a year and for the past six years, he has paid for more than $1,000,000 of business annually. He is a life member and vice chairman of the Million Dollar Round Table of large volume salesmen; for 22 years leading producer for his company and several times president of the Leading Producers Club.

GRANT TAGGART.

Stressing the great opportunities presented by the life underwriter's profession, he advised his fellow salesmen to capitalize on the feeling of success and optimism; have faith in themselves and the thing they are doing; take their business as is comes and build their business structure on a foundation of conscientious, sincere and determined effort.

The meeting was one of the largest in the history of the organization. A silver cup, prize of the National Association, was presented to the local group, one of 13 in the Nation showing the greatest membership gain during the past administrative year.

Local Banking Classes.



J. C. DULIN, Jr.

With the majority of students already enrolled for the first semester, Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, is showing an appreciable increase over recent years, it was announced yesterday by Paul J. Seltzer, chapter president.

A record class is reported in Banking I, making it necessary to divide it into two sections. This class will be instructed by Dr. Elliot H. Thomson, publicity manager, Washington Loan & Trust Co., the regular instructor, and James C. Dulin, jr., treasurer, American Security & Trust Co. Mr. Dulin is a past president of the chapter and has previously served in the faculty as instructor in investments. All other classes also show an increase over last year's session.

This increase indicates the growing interest which is being taken by the junior bankers in the courses offered by the institute. These courses afford educational background necessary to banking careers, and banking employes are becoming more and more aware of the necessity of becoming familiar with the latest developments in the banking field to enable them to serve the bank and the public efficiently.

A course on discussions on current trends in banking, economics and government will commence October 8. It will be instructed by Edward Stone, chief of the project analysis division, resettlement administration. This course will deal with current economic and political trends with particular attention to their effects on banking and should be of special interest to senior bank employes and junior officers.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

With the plan for devaluation of the franc in debate on the floor of the French Parliament, foreign exchange trading was virtually confined to the pound sterling yesterday.

In active trading, the British unit lost 2½ cents in New York at $4.94½. There were reports of a little business being done in the French franc at 5.20 cents, up .06 of a cent, but most dealers quoted that figure as nominal. Swiss francs also were said to have been traded at 23.25 cents, off 9.25 cents, but the market was difficult to find. Holland guilders were quoted on a purely nominal basis at 54.50 cents, off 11.45 cents.

In London the dollar gained 9⅝ cents to 4.93½ to the pound, compared with the overnight New York rate of 4.97.

Two Are Promoted By C. & P. Tel. Co.

The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. announced last evening that F. G. Macarow, formerly general traffic manager of the Washington company, has been made general personnel manager of the four Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone companies operating in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

Mr. Macarow became traffic supervisor of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. at Baltimore in 1928, and later in the same year was made traffic superintendent. He was appointed general traffic manager in Washington in 1929.

Cotton Advances; October at 12.07

New York, Sept. 28 (AP).—Reports of heavy rains in the Southwest over the week-end combined with the constructive view of recent monetary developments, brought advances in cotton today. After selling up to 12.03 early, December reacted to 11.92 but firmed up again, closing at 12.00, with the general market 9 to 14 points net higher.

Cottonseed Oil.

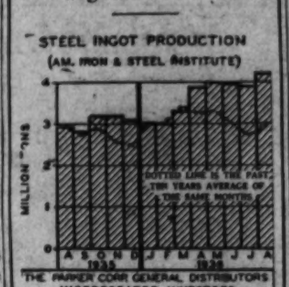
Bleachable cottonseed oil eased today after early steadiness under increased hedging in distant positions, promoted by the lower grain market, weakness in lard and unsettlement in tallow. Final prices were 2 to 3 points net lower. Sales, 106 contracts. Bleachable spot nominal; October closed 10.10; December, 10.22; January, 10.22; March, 10.30; May, 10.35.

B. & O. August Net Exceeds $3,000,000

Baltimore, Sept. 28 (AP).—The Baltimore & Ohio Railway today reported a net operating income of $3,115,696 for August—an increase of $602,071 over July and a gain of $826,801, or 36 per cent, over August, 1935. Today's statement of earnings and expenses marked the first time since October, 1935 that the road has reported an operating net in excess of $3,000,000.

Passenger revenue continued to show definite improvement over figures of a year ago, the statement indicated, despite the sharp reduction in fares this summer. However, the month's total fell slightly below the July level.

August Steel Output Largest in Six Years



Boston, Mass., Sept. 28.—Total steel tonnage produced in August was the largest for any month since March, 1930, and passed August of last year by 45 per cent. This production was maintained in spite of smaller orders from the automobile industry.

Greater Atlas Assets Will Be $110,907,000

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 28.—Atlas Corporation, at its inception in 1923 a private investment concern with a capital of $40,000, today announced plans for a merger with three investment company affiliates and creation of new corporation with gross assets of $110,907,000. Announcement of the program, described as the final step in simplifying the Atlas corporate structure was made by Floyd B. Odlum, president.

The three units to be merged are Pacific Eastern Corporation, formerly Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation; Shenandoah Corporation, and Sterling Securities Corporation, in which Atlas has held control for some time.

Odlum, former Salt Lake City attorney, and George H. Howard, president of United Corporation, Public Utility Investment unit, jointly founded Atlas. The agreement of consolidation which will be voted by Atlas stockholders on October 29 provides for organization of a new Atlas Corporation, with authorized capital of 1,000,000 shares of new 6 per cent preferred stock, $50 par; and 7,000,000 shares of new common stock, $5 par.

To Simplify Structure.

The consolidation, Odlum stated, will eliminate duplication of corporate expenses and "simplify the problems of management." Application will be made to list the new Atlas stocks and the option warrants on the New York Stock Exchange.

Since organization Atlas acquired control of 22 investment companies. These, with the exception of the three to be merged and its Canadian subsidiary and the Yorkport Corporation have been dissolved or otherwise disposed of.

On a consolidated basis as of August 31, according to Odlum, indicated net assets applicable to capital stocks of the new company to be outstanding were $102,159,361, equal to $17.48 a share on the common after making provision for the preferred at $50 a share.

Admiral Sims, War Fleet Commander, Dies of Heart Disease in Boston

Retired Officer Was Nearing 78th Birthday

constantly in enough hot water to float a dreadnaught, and several times, figuratively speaking, he was badly scalded; yet the merit behind his attacks on almost every branch of the Navy, and the audacity of the methods he employed to launch them, would invariably win for him the support of a sympathetic public or an understanding Chief Executive, and thus it was that the much-feared iconoclast marked up victory after victory over those who suffered most from the vitriolic nature of his bombardments.

There was nothing precocious about the admiral's talent for the sea. He had no seafaring antecedents on either side, and displayed no interest for the Navy as a boy. He often recounted the circumstances under which he entered the Naval Academy to show that the beginning of his notable career was nothing more than the merest whim.

Became Middie by Luck.

There had for several years been difficulty in securing candidates for Annapolis, and when the Representative in Sim's district, back in 1875, began looking for a likely boy to nominate for the training school, only three responded, one being Sim's older brother. The successful candidate failed to pass the physical tests, and Sim's brother was too old.

It was then that the future admiral decided to try his luck, but he failed to get through the paper work and was denied admittance. At the end of a year, however, he elected to try again, but when the superintendent of Annapolis heard of this, he requested the Representative not to appoint a boy who had fallen so far short of the requirements only a year before. Without heeding the request, the Representative put young Sims up again, and he passed by the merest hair. "I just scraped in," was the admiral's way of describing his triumph.

He found the work more difficult than he had anticipated, and in 1880 finished twenty-eighth in a class of 56.

Having convinced himself that he could accomplish what he set out to do, Sims immediately lost interest in the Navy, and secured a leave of absence for the purpose of visiting Paris. He remained in France more than a year.

The service record of Admiral Sims shows that he was assigned to the U. S. S. Philadelphia upon his return to the United States, and that he was naval attache at Paris and Petrograd from 1897 to 1900; that he had charge of secret service work in Spain, Russia and Italy during the Spanish-American War, and that all these duties were performed well. He was 43 years old at that time, and had not risen above the grade of lieutenant.

Reported From China.

It was while stationed in China that Sims really introduced himself to the Navy Department at Washington. The introduction was made in the form of lengthy reports, most of which were insubordinately critical of naval equipment and naval administration. Most Americans at that time thought the United States sea arm was hardly second to the best, but Sims, a minor officer stationed beyond the borders of the country, began to tell them that the American Navy was a joke. One British ship, he said, could easily dispose of four or five American vessels of corresponding type.

The reports multiplied when Sims went to Petrograd. For months they were dumped at the rate of two or three a day on the indignant naval officials at Washington. In three years Sims sent in more reports than all the other European naval attaches combined. His correspondence filled 22 letter press books, containing 11,000 pages.

In 1901 Sims submitted a report on the faulty construction of American battleships, which later was resognized as one of the most important documents in the history of the Navy. Its receipt was not acknowledged, and for three years it was lost. It was ultimately discovered in the desk of a bureau chief. Most of his other reports were consigned to the flames.

Appealed to Roosevelt.

Accused of insubordination, and more than once barely escaping court-martial, Sims next decided to take his case to a higher power. He wrote to Theodore Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and suggested that the fleet be ordered out for target practice. Much to the surprise of all who knew of Sims' epistolary campaign, the entire Atlantic fleet was sent out on an appointed day to try its hand at sinking a condemned sailing ship. At a little more than half a mile from the target, the vessels began blazing away, but after firing thousands of projectiles, the old windjammer remained intact. She had two holes in her sails.

Yet even this demonstration failed to movethe Navy Department to action. Several years passed, and in the meantime Roosevelt had been sent to the White House. Sims had never ceased to write scathing reports, but when they went unanswered he determined to ignore and even defy Navy regulations to an extent never before thought of by a subordinate officer. His plan was to appeal directly to President Roosevelt through the United States mails.

It was a historical communication, that letter to Roosevelt. It told of all the previous reports, and made many and varied suggestions for improvements in the Navy.

"Get me all those reports," was Roosevelt's command when he read the audacious letter. He immediately ordered target practice, and found that there had been virtually no improvement in marksmanship since the previous one. The American gunners made 13 per cent of hits, while the British navy was averaging from 80 to 85 per cent.

"Cable to China for that young man to come home at once," Roosevelt told the Navy. "Give him entire charge of target practice for 18 months; do exactly as he says. If he does not accomplish something in that time, cut off his head and try somebody else."

Lieut. Sims thus became inspector of target practice—a position he held for more than six years. At the expiration of that time the American gunners were by actual comparison the best in the world. Roosevelt, in an official communication issued in 1909, said:

"Commander Sims has done more for target practice than any other man in the United States. It is chiefly due to him that we shoot as well as we do. It is humiliating to think what poor shots we were during the Spanish War."

Meanwhile, Sims had shifted his attack to other and more glaring faults of the Navy. He began calling attention to ship construction. Picking out the old battleship Kentucky, he declared:

As was the case in his attacks on the gunnery, the new series of reports went unnoticed. The Navy even continued to contract for more ships precisely like those Sims had pronounced useless.

Finally, he decided upon a course even more insubordinate and audacious than his letter to President Roosevelt. He would take his case directly to the American people. He communicated with his friend, Henry Reuterdahl, marine architect, and aided him in the preparation of a series of articles pointing out the defects of American naval ships. The first installment appeared in a publication of national scope at a dramatic moment—just as the American Navy started on its historic cruise around the world in 1908. Probably no single article ever published in this country caused such a sensation.

Sims achieved his purpose. For weeks the newspaper of the country talked of little else and the magazine received tons of clippings referring to its "unpatriotic article." Suspicion immediately settled on Commander Sims, and even the Senate took note of the situation and started an investigation.

But while all this was in progress there was something of a comedy going on under the surface. President Roosevelt, although not actually inspiring the Reuterdhal articles, knew that they were being prepared. He had realized long before that publicity was the one cure for naval lethargy.

When Sims received a letter from the department demanding an explanation of his unheard of conduct, he immediately took it to President Roosevelt.

"Apparently they intend to court-martial me," he said.

"Well, don't you deserve it?" asked the President. "Haven't you been insubordinate."

"Yes," Sims replied, "just as insubordinate as you were on a famous occasion."

The reference was to Roosevelt's "round robin" of the Spanish-American War, and brought laughter loud and long from the Chief Executive. After Sims had left, Roosevelt sent for the Secretary and ordered him to drop court-martial proceedings. The Senate, too, which had started an investigation with an idea of refuting the Sims charges, soon realized that they rested on a firm foundation and, accordingly, abandoned its efforts.

The modern American Navy is said to date from the first Reuterdahl article. Many of the old ships were rebuilt, and none of their defects was incorporated in new construction.

Within the Navy, Sims was always a storm center. There was considerable surprise, however, when it was discovered in 1910 that he had no scruples against taking a hand in international relations and affairs of state. His first venture into this field, as well as his subsequent ones, caused the Washington Government to chafe for many days under the lash of public disapproval, and finally called forth a reprimand from President Taft himself.

The American fleet had been sent on a friendly visit to France and England, but had received no instructions to include Germany. This the Germans regarded in the light of something approaching an insult, hence the situation was extremely delicate. It was made infinitely worse, however, when Admiral Sims, speaking at a luncheon to American sailors at the Guildhall, concluded as follows:

"If the time ever comes when the British Empire is seriously menaced by a European coalition, your people can count upon every ship, every dollar, every man and every drop of blood of your kindred across the sea."

"I spoke from the heart, not from the head," Sims afterward explained, but the Germans, nevertheless, looked upon his statement as a virtual declaration of eventual war by the United States, and were far from satisfied by the prompt disavowal eminating from the State Department.

Former President Taft, referring to this episode toward the close of the World War, remarked with an evident show of satisfaction:

"The ways of history are curious. When I was President I reprimanded a naval officer for saying the very thing he is doing now. That officer was Commander, now Vice Admiral Sims, in command of the American Navy in Europe."

Commanded War Navy.

Sims was appointed president of the War College early in 1917, but on the outbreak of the World War he was given command of all American destroyers operating from British bases. He was designated later by Congress to command a large fleet and authorized to assume the rank of vice admiral. In June of the same year he was given the title of commander, United States Naval Forces operating in European waters, with additional duties as naval attache in London. In 1918 he was promoted to the rank of admiral, and throughout the war remained commander of the American fleets in the active war zone. He returned to the United States in 1919 and resumed his place as president of the war college, which restored him to his former rank of rear admiral.

Sims was immensely popular in England, and when he left, the British gave him a demonstration such as they never before had given a foreign naval officer. And they seemed proud to remind him that he was the only man other than an Englishman who had ever commanded a part of the British fleet. For several months Sims was in command of the Allied submarine chasers off the Irish coast. The fleet was made up largely of British vessels.

Returning to America, Sims lost much of his popularity when he submitted a report to the Senate Naval Affairs Committee alleging grave errors on the part of the Administration and the Naval Board in the management of naval operations during the war.

He caused another wave of protest, both public and military, when he declined to accept a Distinguished Service Medal in 1919 because, as he said, the medal had been conferred upon those who were not deserving of the distinction, and had been denied many others who were entitled to it.

Although he was recommended by Secretary Daniels for the life rank of admiral, the honor never was conferred upon him because of the naval report and also in view of his many precedent-defying speeches, and he retired from the Navy in October, 1922, upon reaching the age limit of 64. He had spent 42 years in the active service—24 years at sea and 18 on land.

In 1921 Admiral Sims committed his second serious diplomatic indiscretion when he made a speech in London touching on the Irish situation, which was then acute. He was quoted as saying that the Sinn Fein hampered the work of allied troops in the war and "attacked us indirectly."

The speech stirred up a wave of protest almost as far reaching as that which followed his 1910 declaration and resulted in Secretary Denby of the Navy recalling him to Washington. After the charges had been investigated, Sims was publicly reprimanded by the Naval Secretary.

"I got what I deserved," he said. "I spilled the beans. I am very sorry to have caused the Administration any embarrassment. I didn't know the speech was loaded as much as it was."

Admiral Sims was retired October 15, 1922. Just prior to this and for some time afterward, he became engaged in a bitter argument with the friends of Irish freedom after he had charged that the Sinn Feiners had tried to hamstring the allies in the World War.

In 1905 Admiral Sims married Anne Hitchcock, daughter of Ethan Allen Hitchcock, one time Secretary of the Interior. Five children were born to them—three boys and two girls.

Seems like this were quite common in Denver, Colo., yesterday as one of the worst September storms in years broke trees and power lines. Motorists detoured through alleys and over sidewalks to reach downtown business district.
